Women Alpinists Swept to Death

Near Peak When Hit By Blizzard

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — An all-woman attempt to climb Mount Cho Oyu, the world's sixth highest mountain, was reported last night to have ended in disaster. Two women and two Sherpa guides were reported missing, presumed dead.

One of those missing was Mrs. Claude Kogan, 39, leader of the dozen women who attempted to climb the 26,846-foot peak.

SKI CHAMPION

Mrs. Kogan, 39, long has been known for her mountaineering exploits. The other missing member is Claudine van der Straten, 26, Belgian ski champion and pin-up girl of the expedition.

The Nepal foreign office said the two women, along with Sherpa guides Angnorbu and Tchusang, have been missing since Oct. 1.

Other members of the expedition—which includes women from France, Britain, Switzerland, India and Belgium—were believed on their way back to Katmandu.

CLOSE TO SUMMIT

Mrs. Kogan and Miss Claudine van der Straten were close to the icy summit of 26,846-foot Cho Oyu peak when the blizzard struck them down.

The women were trying to prove they could match the skill and endurance of men who had scaled the peak twice before—Austrians in 1954 and Indians in 1958. They left here Aug. 21 and by mid-September had successfully established their base camp at 19,000 feet.

ALLWOMAN

The all-woman expedition included Nima and Pen Pm, teenaged daughters of Sherpa Tensing Norkay, who conquered Mount Everest with Sir Edmund Hillary in 1953.

Churchill Praises Red Moon Rockets

The rockets, said the 84-year-old elder statesman, "are not just an ingenious bid for prestige."

"They are the manifestations of a formidable advance in technology... I do not doubt that they will ultimately reap a rich harvest for those who have the imagination and power to develop them and to probe ever more deeply into the mysteries of the universe."

Death Threatens French Politicians

PARIS (Reuters) — Secret pamphlets and telephone calls have threatened death to a number of politicians and newspaper men who advocate a liberal attitude toward the Algerian independence movement.

The threats are purported to come from a right-wing underground movement which demands full integration of the African territory with France.

Police have placed guards on some of the leading liberal and leftist politicians, including ex-premier Pierre Mendes-France.

At the same time, police pressed investigations into the attempted murder early Friday of 42-year-old Senator Francois Mitterrand, a former justice minister.

Mitterrand jumped out of his car just before the would-be killers riddled it with bullets.

Manned Weapons Still Best For Decade, Says Air Expert

LOS ANGELES—Maj. Alexander de Seversky said that manned aircraft such as the B-70 intercontinental bomber will be the best air weapon for at least another decade.

De Seversky—one of the pioneers in aviation—said: "Because of the advanced defense measures now being developed, weapon systems cannot rely solely on speed and altitude."

"They need man's brains," he said, "and the function of choice to make dependable penetrations of today's sophisticated defences."

"Nothing," he added, "is more sophisticated than man."

Ghost of Nurse

LONDON (Reuters)—The staff at a London hospital is investigating reports that the ghost of a nurse had been seen by patients shortly before their deaths.

The London Daily Mail says the ghost wears a grey uniform. According to the newspaper, one man said he saw the "grey lady" standing beside the fire. Soon after, he died. A woman patient reported being handed a cup of tea by the lady in grey—but no nurse had tended her. She died too.

Nurses in the hospital have been told of several other instances of this phenomenon.

Defence Production Minister R. J. M. O'Hurley took his first look at Victoria's shipyards yesterday and went away impressed.

"He went away with a much clearer conception of how important the shipbuilding industry is to Greater Victoria," Mayor Percy Scurrall said last night.

Members of the mayor's special committee seeking a more work for local yards had a private, 30-minute discussion with the minister before they accompanied him on a whirl wind tour which took in Victoria Machinery Depot Outer Wharf and Bay Street plants, Yarrow's Ltd. shipyards, and HMCS Dockyard.

"I think it did some good," said the mayor. "The minister of course was in no position to make promises, but he certainly was sympathetic to our cause."

Mr. O'Hurley flew here from Vancouver after luncheon yesterday and returned to the mainland in the late afternoon.

The mayor pledged himself and members of his committee—G. Conway Parrot, A. W. Toofie, and J. Courtney Haddock—to a "continuous fight" against eastern shipyards for a bigger share of federal shipbuilding contracts.

Decision Reserved In Involved Divorce

VANCOUVER (CP)—Mr. Justice H. W. McInnes reserved decision in B.C. Supreme Court on the effect on a B.C. marriage of California legislation that permits making a final divorce decree retroactive.

Gordon Ambrose, Vancouver police chief, is seeking annulment of his marriage at Newport, Wash., Sept. 14, 1953, to Majorie Sims Harnish on the grounds that the final decree of her 1930 California divorce was not entered in 1939.

His landlord, J. D. Albright, said when the boy was not making the rounds of local night clubs and cocktail bars he listened to classical organ music.

"I have many friends in the clergy and I have never seen them behave in that way," Albright said. "He sure was convincing for a while, though."

J. S. Burton and John Stanton, Mrs. Ambrose's counsel, said the divorce was made final before the marriage by a retrospective order authorized by California statute.

Mrs. Ambrose, who testified she still loves her husband despite frequent separations and would go back to him, said her lawyer obtained the retroactive decree in 1958.

James Mooney, cruise captain and member of the club executive, was commenting on the B.C. Safety Council recommendation that the department of transport test the ability of all owners of boats 10-horsepower and above.

He was responsible for assuring the safety of embassy files and of such things as guarding against possible wire taps and hidden listening devices.

He has been assigned to the Moscow embassy since January, 1958. Before that he was stationed at the embassy in Vienna for a little more than a year.

Air Terminal Building

WHILE there must be understanding of the position of the federal government pressed to do more than its resources permit at present and patients in that regard, it is difficult to accept the conclusion that construction of the much-needed air terminal building at Patricia Bay has retrogressed to the category of "less urgent" projects. The airport has international connections. Day by day it is the first part of Canada that many incoming visitors see. It is also, as last week emphasized, an emergency touch-down for American planes on the Seattle - Fairbanks route; as well as filling a fully comparable role for Canadian flights using Vancouver or Comox as bases.

The work done this year at Patricia Bay by the federal government, involving an outlay in the neighborhood of $900,000, has been appreciated. Existing runways have been strengthened, regraded and drained. They have not however been lengthened, nor have the terminal facilities for the public been changed. The lengthening of the runways unquestionably will be a major expen-ture, but sooner or later that too will need to be done. Meanwhile construction of a new terminal building by contrast is a minor project. For a very modest outlay Patricia Bay's public reception facilities could be brought up to today's standard and made acceptable to domestic and international air traffic. That much at least should now be done.

Mayor Scurrah is correct in holding the Dominion to eventual fulfillment of the terms of the pledge made to this community that Patricia Bay would be put on a parity with today's flight standards in every respect. It is apparent now that the major task of runway extension may have to wait for a while. It is by no means clear why terminal building facilities similarly should be shunted indefinitely into the future. That small improvement together with this year's work at the airport would hold the line, and would restore for Canada some of the respect it has been losing through second class conditions on an airfield of primary flight importance and in daily international use.

Archie McKinnon

IT is a tribute to the man himself that a whole legion of people throughout the Victoria area should have been shocked and concerned by the unfortunate mishap which befell Archie McKinnon. His name is such a household one his accident had almost a personal effect on many others. He is not yet out of distress and pain but this weekend it is reassuring to learn that his road to full recovery may be looked forward to with confidence.

The gravity of the injuries he suffered is not to be minimized nor the mishap to be less regretted, but the accident does serve to recall the devoted service over a long period of years given by Mr. McKinnon to this community. There can be few men who ever served it better no matter what their particular field of activity. Two generations of men and women now grown to maturity have cause to greet his name with tenderness and affectionate regard.

It is not simply that he gave health and strength to many budding youngsters, that he developed and trained countless sturdy athletes; but that he long has been an inspiring example of good cheer and courage, of patieice and kindly will, of fine sportsmanship and manly endeavor. By his own bearing he taught real citizenship as well as running, swimming and the other athletic arts of which he is so pronounced a mentor.

When the time comes for "Archie," as he is so popularly known, to lay down the burden of his service at the YMCA one hopes this city will express its thanks in appropriate and tangible fashion. Meantime citizens of all climes will join in wishing him an unimpaired return to the vigor and health which has marked his myriad activities on behalf of Victoria youth, and thus of the community at large. And may it be so.

Pollsters Up the Pole

SOcialists were not the only ones to go down to defeat in the recent United Kingdom elections. They took the political pollsters along with them. These professional button-holers are at least consistent in one thing: their capacity for what is vulgarly described as bad guesswork. Despite their numerous humiliations in the past, they predicted the outcome of the British elections with a degree of inaccuracy wide enough to shatter any lingering belief there might have been in their ability to foretell how an electorate would vote.

In this connection it is interesting to note the last-minute abandonment made by the mass-circulation Daily Express of its customary election forecast. The Express made its momentous announcement with refreshingly candor. Consigning it to the wastebasket, the paper said: "The Daily Express acknowledges that it has no confidence in its own poll, although it is conducted with complete integrity and all possible efficiency."

Then the London daily added an observation which may explain the failure of public opinion surveys generally: "The British public is sick and tired of polls. There are too many investigators asking questions. The public feels that its privacy is being invaded. It declines to be badgered into disclosing its intentions."

Delete the word "British" and that comment would fit the attitude of the public in most countries invaded by the professional pollsters. But they'll be in there as large as life again when the American presidential election rolls around next year.

Thinking Aloud

LISTENING to Naden's commanding officer talk the other day about how the RCN makes sailors out of civilians made one appreciate the worthwhile career that lies ahead of a recruit. The educational facilities alone give every young man a chance to make up for any deficiencies, and there is practically no limit to what he might make of himself. If he has the potential the navy will move no effort to spur him on and advance him to substantial rank.

Navy nowadays are totally unlike those of even 20 years ago and a far higher degree of intelligence is required to cope with the complexity of modern weapons and equipment. As I listened I almost wished I were young again, just to grasp the splendid opportunities the RCN offers.

Soon after I got back to the office however I realized my own deficiencies. On one of our landings a new vending machine has been installed and this one provides tea. Hitherto this most blessed of beverages has been ignored by vending authorities, and my joy was great. It was short lived, however. The supply business is too complicated. One can have tea, period. One can have it with sugar or cream, or with both. One can have extra cream or extra sugar, or both. The choice, seemingly, is endless.

So are the buttons which must be pressed in correct sequence if one's heart's desire is to be obtained. Since the machine serves other beverages as well, with equivalent variations, you can perhaps guess my predicament. The dashboard of an aircraft or the radar room of a ship could hardly be more bewildering to one with no sense of mechanics. I simply could not have made the grade with the RCN.

Initially one had supposed that queens do what most ordinary folk do not—keep copies of their private correspondence. Otherwise it had seemed that Queen Mary's letter to her son about his abdication could not have been included in the biography of the Queen just published. Even so it appeared surprising in the light of what Queen Mary says on the duty of kings, that royal assent to its publication should have been given.

Now comes a news note from the Duke of Windsor in Paris advising that he himself made the letter available. That increases the surprise.

To be a clown and to clown are not necessarily the same. One "clown" or otherwise plays the fool. The classic clown is a hamartian figure, either with a broken heart over the girl on the flying trapeze or the underdog fighting against authority. Chaplin was of the right vintage and so is Danny Kaye in such role. So too was Harold Lloyd although the pathos was sometimes absent; and Laurel and Hardy. And maybe Buster Keaton even if he did not exert the same tug on the heart.

It is surprising to find in a list of famous film clowns such names as Jack Benny, Fred Allen, W. C. Fields, Eddie Cantor and Groucho Marx, however. Allen was too much the wisecracker. Fields too egotistical. Marx too sophisticated. Cantor too buoyant and Benny too ordinary for these five to belong to the historic mould. They "clownified" rather than portrayed the foible figure whose inadequacies made him touchingly humorous.

Hungry Horse

It's a long way back to the situation where taxation was solely a method of finding the revenues for the government. In Canada these altered uses of taxes have seriously hurt the effective working of the market mechanism, which is regarded by most economists as the instrument best suited to secure the most effective use of the country's resources.

With the example of such up-and-coming countries as West Germany plain before the eyes, it's a wonder that Canada hasn't made changes to help the advance of industry, from which most of the actual tax money must come. In this country's tax schemes, there's too much attention to loading up the cart of government spending and not enough attention to feeding the horse of industry.

School Costs

In a matter as important as schools the government should try to avoid going into the bond market. The capital cost of new schools could still be shared equally with the school districts. The government would become the banker and the school districts' share of the cost would be paid to the government in much the same way as annual payments of principal and interest are now made.

The big difference would be that there would not be high interest rates and heavy bond discounts, factors now plaguing

Using New Building

Departments of the Canadian government have moved into new quarters in the federal building without fanfare and without causing a ripple in the smooth sea of life in this district.

We feel sure that the public would appreciate some official ceremony to introduce the fine building into the life of the district.

It is noted that turning of the first sod for the district's original federal building fixed the month of May and the year 1913 in the minds of many residents. Middle-aged men of today recall the event which they attended as boys in stove-pipe pants. It was a gala occasion, one to be remembered and to become a part of local history. An official opening ceremony at the new federal building should be featured in the opening chapter of another era in the history of the Alberni.

Britons Now Immune to Socialism

By RICHARD L. THOMAS

BRITAIN is now the land of the do-it-yourself citizen — in the metaphorical rather than literal sense. The age of little capitalists has begun in earnest, and the chances are that once again we shall have a government which governs rather than intrudes.

The interesting historical point is that it could not have happened if we had not had the socialist upheaval in 1945. The overdose of socialism injected into our veins in the six following years has made the majority of Britons immune to socialism in the foreseeable future. Indeed, many responsible socialists have come to the conclusion that socialism as we know it has done all it can hope to do in Britain. It is now outdated, unexciting and broadly impractical.

But if socialism is dead (certainly it is in the sense that it involves nationalization, controls and the dominance of the citizen by the executive) so, too, is traditional British capitalism. The gentleman in top hat, black coat and striped trousers grinding the face of the poor has vanished, too. The old class war has vanished. The Labor government after the war virtually killed the middle class, but in its place there has emerged a new, and rather exciting "do it yourself" middle class.

They are artisans, craftsmen and administrative workers who are now earning good pay; who no longer regard themselves as the traditional cloth-cap workers of the world but in the new type of citizen who wants many things but not government interference—help, yes; interference, no.

The socialists, for example, wanted to nationalize housing. Their idea was that all houses should be bought

Starting from the aerodrome at Juvilly, he flew to Paris, about 13 miles. After manoeuvring over the city, at an average height of 400 feet, he ascended in gradually diminishing circles, and passed several hundred feet above the Eiffel tower.

The Packsack

OF GREGORY CLARK

THE population of the earth is said to be increasing at the rate of 60,000 a day. By the time these 60,000 a day are grown up it will, of course, be increasing at a far greater rate. The human race in its various colors appears to have got some yeast in it, and is blowing up like dough in a bakery.

Where we are going to put everybody in another hundred years is the problem that doubtless is encouraging space travel. No fooling, we are apparently looking for room elsewhere.

One angle of the problem appears to be overlooked. All the time we are increasing at this frightening rate, we are also doing everything else science can devise to make ourselves bigger. Instead of racking their brains to increase and improve the size of man, the nutritionists should be working tooth and nail to invent some sort of pill that will make us smaller. If the earth is to be crowded to the point of suffocation in another hundred years, the least we can do is see to it that it isn't crowded with six footers.

What the future needs, as can clearly be seen, is the human race reduced to about half size, or even less. In fact, if we could get mankind down to around the size of the average insect, 60,000 a day wouldn't look so bad. We could then fight the plagues of locusts on even terms, and may the best man win.

Letters to the Editor

'Ridiculous Order'

Re the ridiculous order of Agriculture Minister Steacy re the the 64-oz. carton of milk: I feel as I am a very satisfied customer of the Milky Way Dairy. I could not get this pass without stating my views on this matter.

Before purchasing their milk, etc., it was explained to me fully the quantity in these cartons. The one I always buy is the 42-cent carton. I know and any normal, intelligent person knows once only receives what one pays for, but the quality of this milk counts, too. I think the cartons are more hygienic than bottles, for they are used and then destroyed which in itself is highly satisfactory especially with children in the household.

Is Canada not a free country any more, or should these dictators that are springing up around us be sent about their business? We do not need such men.

(Mrs.) A. McDonald.

5640 W. Saanich Road, R.R. 1, Royal Oak.

Ideal Society

I agree with Mr. Luff. My last dictionary definition of socialism was faulty. So here's another, this time from Chamber's Twentieth Century: "Socialism is the name given to any one of various schemes for regenerating society by a more equal distribution of property, and especially by substituting the principle of association for that of competition."

The real point at issue is: "Will human beings in the foreseeable future be able to alter their own baser human motives and to change their own fallible and interesting human characteristics to such an extent that the ideal society envisaged by Mr. Luff can be brought about and then maintained?"

Is this possible? Mr. Luff evidently thinks so; I don't.

A. W. SMITH.

9780 West Saanich Road, R.R. 2, Sidney.

Nobody Deceived

Entering the present debate regarding the controversial 64-oz. milk carton used by the Milky Way Dairies, we strongly feel the minister of agriculture has bypassed the issue and given a weak explanation for putting the small man out of business.

As staunch supporters of the Social Credit movement we fail to see where this move is in keeping with Social Credit policies, for it does not promote agriculture but discriminates it.

Housewives are familiar with the 32-oz. quart measure, recipe measurements are based on 32-oz. per quart, 8 oz. per cup or ½ pint. We are not being deceived as the minister of agriculture has stated.

When we can buy fruit juices, etc., canned in B.C. in 48-oz. size (neither 1 quart nor ½ quarts in the minister's new method of measuring liquids) we would like to know why we cannot buy a 64-oz. carton of milk, of excellent quality, also packaged in British Columbia.

We feel we have a minister of agriculture who does not have the interest of the small man at heart, and does not clearly define his position, for during his years of office he has not accomplished any noticeable, worthwhile achievements. He has in fact chosen to close his eyes to the lack of development in this field.

Although we haven't any connection with the dairy business other than as housewives, and as active Social Credit supporters our interest is to see Social Credit policies adhered to, especially in places of high office.

Should We Treat Drug Addicts As Sick People or Criminals?

By BERNARD GAVZER
(Associated Press)

LONDON — When his girl friend walked out on him, Mark decided to kill himself.

The noise at the Baker Street underground frightened him, so he didn't jump into the path of a train. At the seashore he was up to his knees in the water, but it was too cold.

"I was too much of a coward to get it all over like that," Mark says, "so I decided to kill myself a little bit at a time."

Mark shot himself—not with a gun, but with a hypodermic needle. Its ammunition—heroin—was strong enough to make him forget his girl. But his new sweetheart—dope—clung to him every minute of every day.

In this way, Mark was no different from any of the thousands of drug addicts in North America.

But the craving need was about the only thing they have in common. If Mark had taken the same course in New York or Vancouver, B.C., instead of London, he would be a criminal. Here he is just one of Britain's 441 known men and women, who have a sickness known as drug addiction. He deals with a doctor instead of a pusher. No racketeer gets rich off his habit.

Could North America solve its drug problem by adopting all or part of the British system?

Yes, says Judge John M. Murtagh, chief magistrate of trial justice."

He Battles Communism With Brush

By AMY THOMPSON
Special to The Colonist

Fifty-year old Estonian painter Johann Voldemar Saarniit fights Communism with a brush. In his hands it becomes a powerful weapon.

Torture, starvation and death in Siberian labor camps is the hair-raising theme of paintings on walls of his Toronto home.

Sixteen years ago he escaped from just such a camp.

Today he has a mission. He is showing that even the horrors of German concentration camps are no worse than what he saw east of the Ural Mountains in deepest Russia.

In 1941 Johann was a promising painter. Then Russia invaded Estonia and the Russians conscripted Johann into the army and later took him to Novo-Nasenliky, Siberia, for forced labor.

In six months Johann saw 600 of his comrades shrink to skeletons and die.

Saarniit has now reproduced his experiences in documentary oil paintings for all the world to see.

They brushed aside British reservations about the gravity of the threat.

They ignored Canadian caution in assessing the situation — External Affairs Minister Green never said anything more alarmist about Laos than that he "felt some concern."

Spread Industry Favored

VANCOUVER (CP) — Defence Production Minister O'Hurley said here the federal government favors decentralization of industry.

In a speech to the Vancouver Board of Trade he said the decentralization is necessary because of the danger of atomic attack.

Canadian industry now was concentrated in Ontario and Quebec. Foreign companies establishing in Canada went to those provinces. French companies established in Quebec while United Kingdom businesses went to Ontario.

He was explaining to British Columbia businessmen the government's defence production sharing agreement with the United States.

UBC Drug Hits High Blood Fat

A new drug developed at the University of British Columbia is now being used to combat high blood fat, one of the major causes of hardening of the arteries, it was disclosed here yesterday.

"However, we are still studying it to determine whether there are any long-range side effects," said Dr. Paris Constantinides, UBC anatomy professor.

He disclosed details of the drug — synthetic sulphated polycarboxide — at the Empress Hotel where the B.C. Medical Association convention was held.

The synthetic substance is now being used by clinical investigators (doctors) at a Vancouver hospital, the doctor said.

"We've used it with encouraging results for about a year although it has not yet been completely assessed."

CNR Hopes 'Package Deal' May Renew Popularity of Travel by Railway

When Canadians make a trip of 100 miles or more, three out of four of them make the journey by car.

This leaves only 25 per cent of the 35,000,000 such trips every year to the railways and airlines. The figures refer to 1958.

Canadian National Railways officials confronted with these statistics have taken the view that it is time something positive was done to revive the popularity of train travel.

They have come up with what they call an all-inclusive package scheme that will make railway travel considerably more economical than road or air for both individuals and groups.

In addition to offering reduced fares, the all-inclusive plan covers regular dining car meals, all tips, and for tourist class passengers lower standard sleeping berths. It is also available at cheaper price for coach class travel.

A. C. L. Warner, CNR's general passenger agent for British Columbia, says that the plan which came into effect Oct. 1, is proving popular, and is persuading a larger portion of the long-distance auto-travelling public to go by train instead.

As an example of the new CNR package fares, the cost of

The machine is a "Controlled Reader" — projector and film strips of stories in print — and the school is Royal Oak.

"It is not a cure-all," says principal Harold Darkes, "but it has resulted in a 25 per cent improvement in reading skills here in just four weeks."

When the unit is in operation lines of type are flashed on the screen one by one and

High School 'Frills' No Use to Business

Local businessmen will be interested to know that Vancouver Island teachers are asking at their forthcoming convention how through scholastic efforts they can do most to turn out the type of young person that business is looking for.

The answer could be of considerable importance. To many employers the main expectation is for employee intake of the high school product and the high school curriculum.

Only the other evening Dr. Norman MacKenzie, president of UBC, said in a television interview that if the universities had their way, or had any power in the matter, they would prefer an intake of students who were sound in their basic education.

I know employers in Victoria who ask little more than that the product of the schools should be able to do simple arithmetic accurately, be able to spell all run-of-the-mill words, and to be able to put thoughts on paper either in letter or report either.

It is surprising how many high school students fall under this test.

Is enough attention not being paid to the three "Rs" — reading, arithmetic and reading?

It is not to be thought that business alone is critical of the high school product and the high school curriculum.

The new plan is available from Halifax to Vancouver and it will be in effect until May 15.

"It is an experiment," said Austin Curtis, passenger agent for CNR in Victoria, "and we hope it will have the effect of re-popularizing rail travel."

It establishes rail travel as the most economical form of transportation in the country.

trip between the two points is $106.

The railway also claims that it can beat highway costs where two, three and four persons are involved. Under its reduced group plan, the CNR will take four persons to and from Edmonton for $120 tourist class while it estimates the car costs for the similar journey are $169, with air costs at $248.

In estimating the cost of automobile travel, CNR has assumed that a meal worth $1 will be eaten every 150 miles; that 450 miles a day will be travelled, and that there will be overnight lodging every full day except the last day. The cost of overnight lodging is rated at $6 for a single person, grading to $12 for four persons. In addition it allows 3 1/2 cents a mile for gas, oil and lubrication costs, but nothing for depreciation.

The new plan is available from Halifax to Vancouver and it will be in effect until May 15.

"It is an experiment," said Austin Curtis, passenger agent for CNR in Victoria, "and we hope it will have the effect of re-popularizing rail travel."

In this respect university and business appear to have thoughts in common.

Saanich Troop Planned

A group of parents in Royal Oak is sponsoring a Boy Scout Troop and Cub pack.

The Victoria St. Michael's Scout and Cub group will hold a registration meeting for boys and parents at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Royal Oak Hall, 4699 West Saanich Road.

H. J. M. Wheeler is group committee chairman.

Two group committee training courses for committee members in southwest, southeast and north Saanich areas will be held at 8 p.m., Oct. 22 and 26.

The first meeting will be held in Royal Oak High School, and the second in Belmont Scout Hall, behind Belmont firehall.

Heading the training team is R. L. V. Jermain, district scouting president. He will be assisted by Morris Connor, James Blain and H. D. C. Hunter.

Elected chairman of the Langford group committee at a recent meeting was K. B. Hinck. Other members of the executive are T. L. Hardisty, vice-chairman; R. A. Walker, secretary; Mrs. Ron Somers, treasurer.

The following proficiency badges were issued during the past week by the Victoria boy scout association:

First year star, Norman Bravender; Douglas Henderson, Paddy Rose and Grant Treloar; second year star, Wayne Hodgeson, Tommy Maxwell; toymaker, Ronald Edgar; metalworker, Melvin Dear; woodworker, Melvin Dear.

Amnesty Offered

SINGAPORE (AP) — The government Saturday offered amnesty to Singapore's 10,000 Chinese secret society gangsters if they come forward and confess their crimes by Nov. 3. After that date, police will restrict the gangsters' movements, keep them under surveillance and jail them for suspicious actions.

The Joe Berg plan for advancement of science will be described by Jacob W. Shapiro of Chicago, co-ordinator of the Berg Foundation, the plan provides extra-curricular training through science seminars for gifted students who can absorb more than is offered in regular high school courses. It uses local resources for instruction.

"We feel everyone interested in the gifted student should have an opportunity to learn about the Berg plan," an official said.

Address of welcome to delegates will be given by Mayor Percy Scurrath at the opening session tomorrow morning in the Empress Hotel.

Other speakers include Mrs. W. W. McGill, chairman of the Greater Victoria school board.

Lieutenant-Governor Frank Ross will also attend.

'Storms' (If They Fit) Keep Fuel Costs Down

By GORDON DONALDSON
Special to the Colonist

You can save on fuel by insulating your home—but there are limits.

Last week I felt something had to be done.

Soon the fuel bills will rise horribly.

I decided to double-glaze all the fixed windows in the house, put small, removable wooden frames over the opening sections of window, and have doors fitted professionally.

Double-glazing, theoretically, forms a barrier of dead air between the two sheets of glass, preventing cold air, dust or moisture creeping in.

If it's done properly there should be no need to remove the outer layer for cleaning.

If not—well, if you got the glass in you should be able to get it out again.

The largest panes I had to tackle were four feet by three. I wouldn't advise anybody to try a picture window.

On my window frames, and on most types where there is an area of fixed glass that doesn't open, there was a small wooden ridge three-quarters of an inch outside the glass running all the way around the frame.

I put a thin layer of putty around this ridge, fitted the glass against it, and nailed a strip of $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch round moulding on top, putting it in.

This sounds easy. If the window frames and the glass were all the same size, it would be.

In fact, if I had ordered the glass cut $\frac{1}{4}$ inch too small instead of the exact size (and therefore too big), it would have been no bother at all.

As it was, I had to gouge chunks out of the window frames to get the glass in. I also broke a pane of glass by tapping a nail which just hit the edge, cracking it across.

But the crash and tinkle of glass on the gentle autumn air are on the indispensable part of storm-making.

Illusions of Space

Magic Touch Makes Old House Scintillate

Incredible as it seems the photographs above and below show the same house from exactly the same camera angle. What took place in between was an imaginative application of a kind of magic for tired but potentially good houses that more Canadian families are discovering every year.

This kind of magic takes ideas and perseverance to find good workmen, show them

Imaginative remodeling job transformed dull and cramped looking house into elegant home in the larger picture. Removal of walls and heightening of doors did most to create the illusion.

LIVING SHOWCASE

Mr. Smith is a Toronto builder, and his new air conditioned home is a living showcase of the latest and most practical in building materials and ideas.

One striking feature is the use of brick inside the house. One wall of the elongated entrance hall is of buff brick, same color as the facade. A wall in the den is a squared-off pattern of different colors of brick forming a design.

WALLS OF BRICK

An entire wall of the living room, dining room area is white brick, and a wall of the family room is stone-colored brick with scattered bricks what you want and follow through to see that you get it.

The old house above cost $16,000 this year, the remodeling $5,000—and the alterations were custom-designed.

The 75-year-old row house is only 14 feet at its widest point and the illusion of free-flowing space which the owners have created is incredible. The transformation was effected mainly by removing walls and shooting the doorways that remained up to full ceiling height.

GOOD NEWS

Here are a few good home improvement ideas that have worked for others and may work for you.

—Painting all walls and woodwork white in a long narrow house will create the illusion of space.

—If you need a picture window to make your room brighter but face an ugly view, frosted glass will let in all the light you want without exposing the view.

SPACE CREATOR

—Often the most neglected parts of a house, the attic and basement, make ideal recreation rooms, dens or bedrooms.

—One of the simplest ways to create space is to remove partitions, making two or even three small rooms into a large airy one.

—You can't have too much storage space and walls can serve a double purpose if they hide built-in cupboards, drawers and closets. These can be very attractive, too, faced with louvered doors or colored panels.

Whimpers Relayed to Kitchen

House Acts as Babysitter

By HELEN PARMELEE

Special to the Colonist

Have you ever heard of a "babysitting house?"

Neither had I! But that was before I set foot inside the new split-level home of builder Harley Smith and family.

How can a house—made of brick and mortar and with no feelings—mind a baby?

Well, it can't change diapers; but it does this much:

If Mrs. Smith is cooking dinner in the kitchen she can hear baby Robin make the slightest whimper in his bedroom one floor above.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith can relax in the living room while their children romp in the indoor pool one floor below. If there's a lull in the splashing below they know something needs looking into.

The house's secret is an intercom system in every room.

SAVES ENERGY

It saves endless unnecessary steps around the house; and when there are five levels to contend with, that can mean a lot of energy preserved.

All Mrs. Smith has to do is leave the intercom on in the nursery, and she can work around the house for hours without worrying about the baby.

LIVING SHOWCASE

Mr. Smith is a Toronto builder, and his new air conditioned home is a living showcase of the latest and most practical in building materials and ideas.

One striking feature is the use of brick inside the house.

WALLS OF BRICK

An entire wall of the living room, dining room area is white brick, and a wall of the family room is stone-colored brick with scattered bricks jutting out to put ornaments on.

Then there's the concealed lighting effect throughout the house, all controlled by master switches in the bedroom and kitchen.

Throughout the house is wood paneling in practically every room. Finishes range from California redwood in the living room to mahogany and walnut in other rooms.

MUCH BUILT-IN

Many pieces of furniture are built in, designed by Mr. Smith.

Bed headboards, extra-long dressers and desks are built-in as are the dining room buffet and an enormous stereo-TV cabinet in the family room.

The piece de resistance, of course, is the indoor heated swimming pool.

Right beside the pool is a magnificent family room that's ideal for partying.

Directly above the pool is a 29 by 40 foot tile terrace with a view of the ravine on which the house is built to fit.

Size Dictates Choice

Colors Can Make Or Mar a Room

By BETTIE BRADLEY
Special to the Colonist

If you are moving to a new apartment, you will likely have it custom decorated for you at no extra charge, but if you are moving to a new home then you will likely bear the decorating expense, but you will not be restricted in your choice of materials.

Your selection of paint color in any room should be guided by three factors: the size of the room, the exposure, and the color of your existing furnishings.

The size of the room will be your guidepost in selecting the depth of any given color. Dark colors are dramatic—but make your room look smaller.

LIGHT AND AIRY

Many men prefer deeper tones for their den, because spaciousness is not a requirement for this room. They enjoy the coziness and calming effect of a rich color. This accounts for the consistent popularity of deep tones wood paneling in a room to be inhabited by a man. Women frequently lean to lighter colors for the kitchen, sewing room and bedroom because they like the stimulation of cheerful, airy pastels.

LOWERS CEILING

A dark color on the ceiling makes it look lower—and so does pattern on the ceiling. This explains the decorator use of patterned wallpaper on the high ceilings of old homes. And incidentally a busy wallpaper pattern has the same effect as a dark color—and results in your room looking considerably smaller.

The exposure of your room indicates the use of a "cool" or "warm" color. If your windows face east or north, they don't get the full benefit of the warm afternoon sun. Therefore these rooms can be given warmth artificially—if you dress them in warm tones. Beige, warm grey, any tone in the pink, yellow and orange family—including brown—is recommended.

COOL COLORS

Your room may face south or west. In these cases, warm colors coupled with the bright sunlight, may make them look too hot—especially in summer. The room will be more pleasant in cool beige, grey, blue, green, mauve, or any combination of these hues, such as turquoise.

The final consideration in decorating is really the most important. Your walls must blend with your furnishings. To accomplish this successfully you may have to sacrifice the second rule, or rule of exposure.

DRAPERY FIRST

Consider primarily the color of your draperies. Then your rug. Finally, the upholstered furniture. Walls may be painted the background color of your draperies. This continuity permits the same color to sweep from your walls across your windows—resulting in a look of bigness and unity in your room. (The depth of the color can be lighter or darker, depending on the size of your room.)

COLOR GUIDE

If you prefer contrasts between wall and window, consider using your rug as a color guide. If your rug is a medium to deep tone, the walls should be a lighter tint and the ceiling should be lighter still. This avoids a heavy, stodgy look and monotony of tone.

THE LAST WORD

LONDON (UPI) — Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, with a renewed five-year lease on No. 10 Downing Street, could be evicted before the time is up—and votes will have nothing to do with it. He must consent.

No. 10 (built about 1660 and official prime minister's residence since 1732), has been groaning under the weight of age for some time, and things finally came to a head last June when the Earl of Crawford said that a major overhaul and reconstruction was necessary.

It will be approximately a $12,000 restoration scheme for the home of the prime minister as well as Nos. 11 and 12.

No. 11 is the residence of the chancellor of the exchequer, although he uses it now only for offices and parties. No. 12 is used for the offices of the government whips.

UNIMPRESSED

The time for start of the work on the famed buildings depends on the prime minister, and he is said to be happy with No. 10 as it is. He remains unimpressed by the report of the structural deficiencies.

When the prime minister and his family and staff do move, their new home will be Admiralty House, 36 Whitehall.

Architect Raymond Erigh already has submitted the rough draft on the changes and is awaiting the go-ahead signal before completing the final blueprints.

The changes to be made will strengthen the three buildings while still retaining the present exterior appearance.

Inside, all rooms of historical importance such as the cabinet room, the range of state rooms, the Sloane room of No. 10 and the Sloane dining room of No. 11, will be preserved as they are.

SAME AS BEFORE

This is not to say they will not be reconstructed. But when all the dust clears they will look as they did before.

The work, owing to its delicate nature, will take several years to complete.

As an indication of the plans must first be approved by the Royal Fine Arts Commission and the Ministry of Works. But the prime minister has the last word.

Last-Minute Kick to Deadline Gives Stamps Win Over Eskimos

CALGARY—A booming single and a forward pass interception in the last 21 seconds gave Calgary's Stampeders a breathtaking 25-24 win over Edmonton Eskimos last night, and probably the WIFU playoff spot. B.C. Lions thought they had in the bag two weeks ago.

Ron Morris' single from the Edmonton 19 deep into the end zone tied Calgary with Edmonton for second spot, two points ahead of Lions, who looked awful in a 31-6 trouncing at Winnipeg.

This is the play-off picture: Winnipeg is in and Edmonton seems to be a shoo-in because of an edge in points for and against and because one of Eskimos' last two games is against Saskatchewan.

Calgary, with only one game left, at Vancouver Saturday, is odds-on choice for the final playoff position because Lions must win by a huge margin to overcome a big points deficiency.

Lions, in addition, must win at Regina tomorrow and, on the basis of their showing last night, they'll have great difficulty doing that.

A capacity crowd of 17,000 saw Stamps beat Edmonton for the second time this week in a seesaw thriller which saw Eskimos get all their points in the first and third quarters and the winners get all theirs in the second and fourth.

ALL THREE

Earl Lumsford, who scored all three Calgary touchdowns, got his third at 9:31 of the final quarter and Doug Brown converted to make it 24-24.

After two unsuccessful plays, Edmonton had to kick. Stamps took it on their own 23 and worked to the Edmonton 19, sticking to the ground except for two passes to Gene Filipski.

Morris delivered the nail but Eskimos had one threat left, a threat killed by a pass interception on the second last play of the game.

For Calgary, Brown also had another convert, a field goal and a single. For Edmonton, Johnny Bright, Normie Kwong and Tommy-Joe Coffey got things changed completely in the third quarter, Eskimos getting all the rest of their points for a 24-16 lead that looked impossible to overcome. But the "miracle" Stamps took charge at once in the final quarter. Brown getting a single at 1:25 before Lumsford's late converted touch-down set things up for the garrison finish.

Calgary got the most first downs, 24 to 19. Ground gains were about even, Ronnie Stone being best for Stamps after Lumsford, and the winners had the edge in the air, 183 to 161. Winning quarterback Joe Kapp completed 12 of 23 passes while Parker and Don Getty totalled only seven for 17 and were victims of three interceptions, only ones of the game.

Playing on better ice, it seemed, as in previous games, the clubs turned on the speed from the start. Close checking made the first period the most uneventful of the evening but the second was replete with wide open, end-to-end action and the third was 20 minutes of cliff-hanging as the Totems went all out for the tying goal and just missed.

Totems put on their first sustained pressure of the game in the first five minutes of the second period, buzzing around in the Cougar zone until Pelletier finally broke the back of that attack with a gloved grab of Rudy Filion's close-in backhand.

After both clubs had just missed on end-to-end play, the Cougars suddenly clicked with a picture goal.

They got the puck out of their own zone onto the left boards, Gordie Wilson getting possession. With only a split second to get his backhand pass away as he heard George Ford cutting across the centre line, yell, Wilson led his right-winger perfectly. Ford, whose ability to break is his biggest asset, took the puck in stride, cut in and beat Bev Bentley cleanly from just outside the crease.

That goal, somehow, came close to standing up in a game which could as easily have seen 10 goals scored. Rudy Filion, who appears to get better as he ages, finally clicked for the equalizer the fourth time he was in on the crease.

The win may have proved costly to Bombers, who lost import end Ferrell Funston in the first half with pulled leg muscle. It's not known how long he will be sidelined.

GAMES BACK

Fulback Gerry James, back after an eight-game layoff due to injuries, plunged four yards for another Bomber touchdown, while linebacker Gordie Rowland intercepted a 10-yard touchdown pass to Leo Lewis.

BIG RUSH

Bombers' defensive unit made a creditable showing despite the score, linemen Urban Henry and Chuck Gavin putting a big rush on Van Pelt through most of the game.

The win may have proved costly to Bombers, who lost import end Ferrell Funston in the first half with pulled leg muscle. It's not known how long he will be sidelined.

NOT PRETTY

It wasn't a particularly pretty effort. Filion moved in from the left side with Ford trying to hold his stick down, got his shot away and then poked the rebound in.

It ended 10 minutes of pressure attack in which the Cougars were badly outskated and several times seemed on the verge of caving in. But they hung on doggedly and after they had held off

THREE BY THREE

Prior to Saturday's outburst, the Comets had managed only five goals in their opening three games. Coach Joe Crozier's crew remain in the league cellar, one point back of fourth place Seattle Warriors.

Seattle got 3-3 to Edmonton Flyers in a game at Edmonton Saturday night. Victory boosted Edmonton into a tie with Victoria and Seattle for second place while Calgary had third.

Winger Alex Kuzma, who had played for three other WHL clubs before being purchased this fall as a free agent, paced Spokane to its win with a pair of goals. Singles were scored by Ron Attwell, Max McKillop, Leo Amadio and Bev Bell.

SCORES TWICE

Merv Kuryluk scored twice for Calgary while Lou Janowski, a 45-goal man last season, added the other.

Goalie Emile (The Cat) Francia had a big part in the Spokane win. He stopped only 24 shots, but many of these were close-in drives. Claude Pronovost handled 34 for Calgary.

BUNAWAY WIN

PITTSBURGH (UPI)— The largest victory margin ever recorded in a major league pennant race was 2½ games by the 1902 Pittsburgh Pirates.

Managed by Fred Clarke. The Pirates won 103 games and lost 36 that season.

Cougars, Totems in Tie; Pelletier Big Difference

Showing the speed and balance which last season made them the champions of the Western Hockey League, Seattle Totems found a former teammate blocking their way at Memorial Arena last night as they were forced to accept a 1-1 draw with Victoria Cougars.

Goalkeeper Marcel Pelletier, who has never been better than he has been so far this season, made up for the difference in during a penalty to Art Jones, came back strongly to at least hold their own the rest of the way, had a little tough luck of their own as they tried to cash in on a late penalty to Eddie Stankiewicz.

Attendance was 3,029, largest crowd of the season, and there couldn't have been many fans who wouldn't agree with Seattle coach Keith Allen's pre-game observation that "this league is really something this season; the best, I'd say, that it's ever been."

Allen, who had watched his team lose, 3-1, in Vancouver Friday night, added, "that Bassett and that Pelletier can kill you."

New Yorkers Upset Habs

New York Rangers staggered defending-champion Montreal Canadiens with three early goals and, unlike four previous starts, finished strongly Saturday night to win their first game of the National Hockey League season, a 4-2 upset victory.

A crowd of 13,600 at the Montreal Forum looked on in amazement as the Rangers beat the powerful Canadiens at their own game with a Andy Bathgate, with his first goal of the season, Bill Gadsby, Dean Prentice and Andy Heberton scored the Ranger goals.

Bathgate opened scoring at 2:13 and Gadsby, playing in his 800th NHL game in 13 seasons, put New York in front 2-0 at 15:25 on a power-play.

Prentice upped the margin to 3-0 before the second was two minutes old.

QUITE CONTENT

Heberton's goal at 12:38 offset a pair by Geoffrion and the Rangers were quite content to protect their two-goal lead with fine defensive play in the third period.

Toronto used Duff's 100th NHL goal at 11:41 of the second to open scoring. Hampson set up the play by stick-handling around Boston defencemen Don Ward and Doug Mohns before firing a perfect pass to Duff's stick.

BOOMING SHOT

Hampson, connecting on a 15-footer, and Armstrong, with a booming 40-foot shot, added third-period goals.

Hampson, a rookie drafted from Vancouver of the Western League, has been outstanding in Toronto's opening games.

Veteran Johnny Bower handled 26 shots, including point-blank drives from Bronco Horvath, Stasiuk and Don McKenney, to earn his first shutout.

MINOR BOOT SHUTOUTS COMMON

Saturday was a day for the goalkeepers in the Lower Island Junior and Juvenile Soccer League as nine shutouts were recorded in 14 games and three teams were held to one goal.

Highest-scoring shutout came in a Division VII game as Oak Bay Optimists trounced Esquimalt Legion, 8-0, behind three-goal performances from Bob Belcher and Martin Smith.

GRAHAM'S BULLSEYES

CLEVELAND (UPI)—Quarterback Otto Graham threw 174 touchdown passes and gained a total of 23,584 yards passing during his fabulous career with the Cleveland Browns of the National Football League.

Louisiana State, king of the college football powers, along with Texas and Northwestern, a pair of teams that aspire to the throne, remained unbeaten Saturday.

But all three had close scrapes and Northwestern and Texas narrowly averted the same fate that overcame three other topnotchers.

Louisiana State whipped Kentucky 9-0, with Warren Rabb passing to Johnny Robinson for the only touchdown.

Northwestern's cinderella kids staggered to a 20-7 triumph over Michigan, and Texas came from behind to defeat

Arkansas 13-12 in a game that could decide the Southwest Conference champion.

LSU is ranked No. 1 in the current Associated Press football poll, followed in order, by Northwestern and Texas.

But three other members of the top 10 were not so lucky. Georgia Tech, No. 4, was nipped 7-6 by Auburn; Purdue, No. 6, fell 15-0 before Ohio State, and Iowa, No. 9, was cloppered 25-6 by Wisconsin.

In addition, the Air Force Academy saw its 16-game unbeaten skein shattered by Oregon 20-3. The Ducks thus remain undefeated-united.

Washington State defeated Stanford 36-19 but Washington was beaten 22-15 in Seattle by Southern Cal.

Penn 26, Brown 8, Bucknell 15, Rutgers 8, Penn State 30, Boston U. 12, Syracuse 42, Holy Cross 8, Yale 23, Cornell 6.

Northwestern Creamery increased its Independent Hockey League lead to four points this week by defeating Duncan Garage 6-2 for a fourth straight win.

In another game, Dormans walloped Cantons 10-2 for their first win of the season.

Meanwhile, James Bay moved into second place by thumping Royal Roads 22-3 at Royal Roads player Leroy Bond scored four goals for 12 points.

Final game saw Oak Bay Reds win their first in three starts by downing inexperienced Victoria College 12-5.

Oak Bay Whites ran an unbeaten Victoria Rugby Union string to three games Saturday afternoon at Colville Road Park as Don Burgess, becoming an automatic choice for representatives sides, scored 17 points in a 26-3 win over Navy.

Burgess booted three penalty goals, two converts and two tries as the Whites maintained a two-point lead with their easiest win to date.

Viking Hoopsters Title Contenders?

By LES MILLIN

After a few exhibition games, Vikings basketball team will start league play within a few weeks. The players are being very close-mouthed about predictions of future success, but there is a very prevalent opinion on campus that these boys will bring back the Canadian junior men's championship to the college.

Here's this year's Viking team as released by coach Lew McCorkell last night: Tom Wyatt, Dave Black, Dave Nelson, Darrell Lorimer, Barry Sadler, Robin Barnes, Jim Wilson, Ellery Littleton, Angus Mitchell and Fred Wright.

Soccer got off to a good start with a 4-0 victory over Navy apprentices last week. Now in their regular league play, the Viking soccer team seems to be clicking well.

Not so fortunate were the rugby boys, who made a fuzzy beginning, but should improve now that they have a coach. And their coach is none other than Sammy Paterson, one of the B.C. All-Star team 'hat swept through Japan last year. Our boys should be hitting their stride soon.

This has been a week of bad beginnings. The cross-country crew were a tired sixth place in their first race on Thursday, a fact that disappointed all those who forgot that the varsity hasn't even raised a team for years.

Chess begins its big tournament tomorrow to decide the best player on campus. The decision will take three months of hard play, and there are a number of very closely matched entrants who will probably extend the contest beyond its normal length.

Up at the head of the list is Michael Horn, president of the campus Chess Club, one-time champion of the city. He has played for years, and is generally conceded to be the best bet to take the college title.

Freshmen contenders of some promise are Robin Bugg, Tom Wyatt, and Jeff Eng. Bugg has been a Vancouver Island junior champ, while Eng spearheaded Victoria High's capture of the Baynes-Lewis Chess Trophy last year. Wyatt is more notable for exploits off the backboard than for expeditions on the chess board, but the wiry little basketball star has quite a good grasp of the game.

Sixteen entries in the tournament will be divided into two sections, each section playing a round-robin series until there is only one person left in each. The two remaining contestants, they play a best-of-three match for the title.

Lineup of entries for the tournament is as follows: Mike Horn, Tom Wyatt, Larry Lutz, Joe Sam, Stewart Patrick, John Hart, James Scott, Roger Toogood, Robin Bugg, Jerry Nairatil, Ken Leung, Frank Bridges, Ted Powell, Tim Price, Anthony Toogood, and Jeff Eng.

Victoria College's Engineers are organizing three teams to play "scruff" football, a tackle game that allows no pads. Players are requested to wear running shoes instead of the regulation boots, but that is the only protection offered to participants.

Organized yearly to play for the Engineers Trophy, the teams promise plenty of rough-tough play to anyone willing enough to turn out for the practices. First practice will be held this afternoon at Oak Bay High School's playing fields.

Manager Blair MacLean has mustered more than 30 prospects for the teams already, and is convinced that more will sign up within the next few days.

Badminton has a new facet this year, with a mixed team entered in the Victoria City League. Four boys and four girls make up the third-division team that represents the college.

Campus water polo was organized last week, and prospects look good. The varsity squad swept the city league last year to end an easy first, and they're bent on doing the same thing again.

They have good reason to be confident. Almost every good swimmer in the city who meets the age requirements will be on the team. The two big guns are, of course, Bob Wheaton and Bruce Warburton, both of whom have set plenty of records.

World Mourns Gen. Marshall

WASHINGTON (AP)—Gen. George C. Marshall, mourned throughout the free world as a soldier, statesman and humanitarian, will be buried with simple honors Tuesday in Arlington National Cemetery.

Former President Harry S. Truman said:

"He was a great general, a great secretary of state, and a great secretary of defense."

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer said West Germany's people "are saddened by the loss of a great man" and never will forget Marshall "for one of the greatest deeds of humane help and brotherly love."

Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd of Britain said Marshall will be remembered for his work as U.S. chief of staff and "for the plan which bears his name and which saved Western Europe at a critical time."

Marshal Alphonse Juin of France said Marshall will be remembered as a soldier and as "author of the generous plan which was precious help to the nations of Western Europe impoverished by the war."

30,000 Without Future In European 'Camps' Need Canadians' Help

There are 30,000 refugees in Europe today living in slum-like barracks camps because there is no place else to go. About 6,000 of these are children born in the camps during the past 10 years.

They have never known freedom—freedom from want or freedom to go where they please.

For various reasons, these refugees have been unable to emigrate to other countries.

Without help, they never will.

Starting today, a group of Victorians are trying to show their fellow citizens why help should be given, and given now.

This is "World Refugee Week." It is not an appeal for funds, although money is certainly needed. It is merely a concentrated effort at educating the general public about conditions that should not exist... but do.

Provincial Bookbinder Richard Foster Dies

Funeral services for Richard Foster, 46, a native of Victoria, will be held at 1 p.m. today in McCall's funeral home.

Born in 1913, he died Wednesday in Royal Jubilee Hospital. He attended Central Junior High and Victoria High schools.

He was employed as a bookbinder by the provincial government, and was secretary of the local branch of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.

He had been a member of the union for 23 years, and became secretary in 1945.

Mr. Foster was an active fisherman and bowler, and was a member of the Victoria Golf Club. He was also a member of the IOOF.

Plans Under Study

NANAIMO—A Vancouver Island ratepayers association committee will study five proposals which could alter British Columbia's tax structure.

C. R. Eldred, of Cobble Hill, proposed in a brief to the association yesterday that:

All private residents be placed on the same mill rate for school purposes.

Provincial money grants to school districts were subjected to extra taxes collected by the districts from industrial establishments in the respective areas, or that all industrial taxes be collected by the government and apportioned out of the pupil-ratio basis.

That more technical schools be built.

And that school taxes be placed on automobiles with a minimum taxation of $10 on each car.

The last proposal was brought in by Mr. Eldred because he felt that the "single population who received similar wages to those who were married and supporting families, should assist with school costs."

Village Won't Control Fishing Wharf, Floats

CAMPBELL RIVER — Village commission has refused to take over the control of the wharf and fishermen's floats despite a plea by fishermen and boat users.

But commissioners gave tentative approval to an application to rezone the Richmond Court area to allow construction of a competitive barge landing.

VILLAGE CONTROL

The Campbell River floats were originally built by the federal government and turned over to the control of the village commission.

The commission, in turn, gave control of the wharf to a Vancouver firm.

Commissioners told a delegation of fishermen this week the administration of the wharf by the commission had not been satisfactory.

REFUSED TO PAY

Fishermen had refused to pay their dues, commission chairman J. D. Bundy said, and when the commission had sued for non payment of dues it lost the case.

He suggested the fishermen should approach the department of transport.

Following the public hearing, the commission granted an application by W. S. Mullett to have land in the Richmond Court area rezoned for commercial use to allow construction of a barge landing.

SUBJECT TO APPROVAL

The application was granted subject to the approval of the commission's legal adviser, J. R. McDowell.

Mr. Mullett said the landing will be built in two months and will offer facilities on a competitive basis with the present floats.

Fire department officials are investigating a mysterious fire which completely destroyed this $10,000 house some two miles south of Duncan early yesterday morning. The house, covered by insurance, was unoccupied at the time the fire broke out.—(Colonist photo by Charles Thompson.)

Helpless Neighbors Watch Flames Gut $10,000 Home

Fractured Pheasant Guest at Cowichan

NORTH COWICHAN—Temporary guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. MacPherson, Drinkwater Road, is a wild pheasant which is nursing a broken leg—set in plaster.

"Lucky," the pheasant, was injured when it was escaping from hunters Thanksgiving Day. The MacPhersons plan to keep the bird until after the pheasant hunting season is over.

He is jointly and temporarily owned by Bruce, 8, and Ian, 7, sons of Mr. and Mrs. MacPherson.

"The children don't want him caged up, and they want to make sure he isn't shot. They've decided to let him go when the leg is fixed," said Mr. MacPherson.

Youthful Tree Topper Falls But Is Unhurt

CAMPBELL RIVER—George Robinson, aged about 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Robinson, is in Campbell River General Hospital—but apparently without any injury.

George climbed a tree near his home to top it. When he had finished he came down with the topping.

He fell on some branches on another tree, which broke his fall, narrowly missed two four-foot trees which had been cut. The tree George climbed was about 55 feet tall. He is being detained in hospital in case any fractures are found or if concussion occurs.

KOKSILAH — Neighbors stood by helplessly early yesterday morning as an uninhabited, $10,000 home with contents worth $3,000 was completely destroyed by fire.

ONLY CHIMNEY

Only a chimney and its connecting fireplace stood starkly above the rubble. Officials will investigate to find the cause of the mysterious fire. The house was insured.

It is not known what time the six-room Cowichan Bay Road home started to burn. There is no fire department in the area.

The owner is Alfred Jackson, a CNR car man's helper, who worked here until about a month ago, when he was transferred to Victoria.

THREE YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson and their three children lived in the house about three years. It was up for sale at the time of the fire.

Police were notified the house was on fire at about 3:30 a.m. but by then the house was almost destroyed.

New Group May Fight Rough Deals

NANAIMO—Vancouver Island Ratepayers Association favors the setting-up of an organization which would protect auto drivers who get "rough deals" at the hands of the motor vehicles branch.

W. C. Hamilton of Parksville has already made submissions to the motor vehicles branch and Attorney-General Robert Bonner, but complained that neither he nor the Island Ratepayers Association had received direct replies.

An "indirect reply" came in the form of a newspaper report, however, he said.

Ratepayers learned that drivers who are ruled off the road on medical grounds may now appeal to a board set up by the provincial government. This was one of the main points brought out in Mr. Hamilton's brief which was specifically drawn up to secure a better deal for older car drivers.

Tax Fine, $25

DUNCAN—Jessie Harrison, a resident here, pleaded guilty Friday to a charge of failing to file an income tax report. She was fined $25.

Beady-Eyed Pet Captured

Hawk Rules Roost In Chemainus Home

CHEMAINUS — There's a new, but temporary, beady-eyed "pet" in the Kernachan home.

At about 9 a.m. Friday Douglas Kernachan, a boom-man at the McMillan & Bloedel mill here, was checking booms in the harbor when he spotted a trained hunting falcon on one of the big cross-logs.

He approached without difficulty, put his cap over the bird first, then his handkerchief and transferred the bird from the log to his wrist.

The bird appeared young, he said. It is light grey with a darker grey background, about 10 inches tall, and has leather straps and a bell on its legs.

As Mr. Kernachan was leaving the boom with the falcon, surrounding gulls set up such a clamor that the falcon became startled and tried to escape. It did cast off the handkerchief, and gave Mr. Kernachan a substantial wrist-scratch, but he managed to hang on.

The falcon is now on a diet of raw meat and water at the Kernachan home (telephone, Chemainus 82-R) awaiting word from its owner.

If the owner doesn't show up early next week, Mr. Kernachan will ship the falcon to Frank Beebe, provincial naturalist at the museum in Victoria and an expert on falcons, who will see to it that the bird is restored to its owner through the Falconry Club.

Use This Home Recipe Plan to Lose Ugly Fat

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of bulkily fat right in your own home. Use this recipe plan yourself. It's easy—no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Narcan Concentrate. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full twice a day and follow the Narcan plan.

If your first purchase does not show you the simple, easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; it almost like magic from neck, chin, arms, bust, abdomen, hips, thighs and buttocks. Return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow the easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloating disappears—how much better you feel—how alive, youthful appearing and active.

Garden Notes

Turcoast Hydrangea

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

HYDRANGEA COLORANT (D.M.G.)

OAK BAY)—The chemical used for obtaining the pink and red coloring in hydrangea flowers is common garden lime. Use hydrated lime at the rate of two cupsful per bush, scattering it on the surface over the whole root run and just scratching it in.

If the pink shade of the blooms turns out to be not as deep as you desire, increase the dosage cautiously. The danger sign of an overdose is a mottling of the foliage, and when this stage is reached, no more lime will be just possible to bring the bulbs safely through the winter.

The time to separate Colchicum bulbs is between lifting in midsummer and planting out in early fall.

AUTUMN CROCUS (A.M., Victoria)

—The Colchicums, commonly called Autumn Crocus, are not reliably winter-hardy in the Cariboo country, nor can the bulbs be lifted and stored after blooming, as this is right in the middle of their growth cycle. These bulbs produce flowers without foliage in the fall, and foliage without flowers in the spring, and the only time when it is safe to lift them is after this spring foliage has died down naturally.

I suggest that your friends at Ashcroft, to whom you sent the bulbs, should cover the plants with cartons after blooming, and heap dry leaves over the cartons. In this way it may be just possible to bring the bulbs safely through the winter.

The time to separate Colchicum bulbs is between lifting in midsummer and planting out in early fall.

COPPER BEECH (G. C., Esquimalt)—The beech family prefers a rather sandy loam soil liberally enriched with leafmould. It may be that your unthrifty tree is too dry at the roots, and I would suggest that you spread a heavy mulch of leaves, sawdust, lawn mowings, etc., over its roots before the hot, dry weather comes next year. Make a point of wetting down the foliage every time you have the hose out—freshening up the leaves in this way is a wonderful restorative for a weak or ailing tree.

Unremitting warfare is the only answer to the woodlice problem. Try to keep the garden free from litter which could serve as breeding ground, and keep their favorite haunts dusted constantly with dieldrin or heptachlor, both chemicals sold under the name of Ant and Grub Killer.

Women's Job Is to Please

PARIS (Special) — What is femininity? In France, where femininity is so renowned it is common to think French girls are born with it. Air France has a school to teach girls how to be feminine.

Airline stewardess Yvonne LeBrun summarizes it as follows:

"Femininity to me is strength—and softness," says Yvonne. "Ability to cope with things and people—but gently. The knack of making yourself attractive—but subtly, without showiness."

The really feminine woman would no more show aggressiveness than she'd let her slip show. Both are unpleasing—and she knows it's a woman's job to please. What's more, she likes the job. She doesn't feel inferior to men—she just knows how to handle them."

She lists these rules:

Build the man up—without tearing yourself down. Men don't resent a capable woman if they can feel superior to her in some respect.

Don't pull the "I need protection" gambit at a time when he's too tired to slay dragons and really wants you to act capable.

There's nothing wrong with a blush. At least try lowering your eyelids.

Talk softly. A shrill, high-pitched voice may be female, but it isn't feminine.

The rustle of silk or taffeta, the tinkle (not clank) of a delicate charm bracelet—these spell femininity to many a man.

Femininity is also a daintiness that has nothing to do with your proportions. Walk with short steps; don't mince or lop. Small bites when you eat. Sip that drink. And—especially if you're trying to land him—always eat less than he does at dinner!

Perfume—mais oui. Stick to one and teach him to identify it with you.

Read up on etiquette. Its rules are really a short course in femininity. You may have spent a fortune on that new dress and hairdo—but you'll ruin the whole effect by giving that door a healthy shove or lighting your own cigarette.

Remember femininity is just one long tribute to masculinity.

The Blue Water

Tugs Earn Their Fame

By JOHN FREDERIC GIBSON

Across the road the green, starboard light of the Princess Mary glitters with faint irony. To the south is a facade, a bright, floodlit exterior behind which are deserted offices. Behind that the wharf, cold in the night wind.

Alongside the wharf are the tugs, dark silhouettes. Their names are just visible in the last moments of daylight. Island Imp, Island Mariner, Island Comet and the rest.

This is the Island Tug and Barge wharf. From that little office calls go out across the Pacific to Japan or maybe down to Chile. And the tugs go out too, winter and summer, to Kitimat and Vancouver, San Francisco and Yokohama.

NOTHING MOVES

However, nothing moves tonight. It is only possible, to sit above where the waves slop between the hulls and watch the lights of the city and the cars crossing the Bay Street Bridge and think about the world of tugs.

IMMORTAL NAME

Zwarte Zee is an immortal name in the Dutch ports. The original tug of that name towed a 17,000-ton floating dock from England to New Zealand in 166 days. The next Zwarte Zee escaped to England during the last war and pulled many crippled ships to safety, often sailing alone, unnoticed by U-boats.

FIRST AND LAST

Strangely enough, tugs have been first and last in many stages in the development of marine propulsion.

Floating cranes, sheerlegs, barges, trucks, ways, miles of manila rope. It all makes up tugs and towing. But the greatest element is pure power. The original Zwarte Zee, for instance, had an indicated horsepower of 1,500.

So it is here. Even in the half darkness one can sense the character of each of the vessels. Squat and yet graceful, the hull hiding the size of the engine; the large size propellers well down, again hidden. A tug is deceptive.

WHARVES, TOO

So any wharf. There is nothing here but a small strip of land and a wooden edge to the water. A modern, comfortable office. Yet, if you want to have broken-down battleship taken 12,000 miles this is the place.

Nothing to it.

LONDON (Reuters)—The Hawker Siddeley Aviation Company yesterday announced development of new air ferry large enough to fly 12 small cars and 90 passengers, or up to 126 passengers without cars.

B.C. on Call List Of New Sea Giant

Preparations are almost complete for launching of the biggest British passenger liner since the Queen Elizabeth 20 years ago.

The 40,000-ton Oriana will join the present Orient and Pacific Line fleet of seven liners operating in the Pacific. She will go into service between the Canadian and U.S. west coast, Orient and Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Oriana, to be christened by Princess Alexandra during launching ceremonies Nov. 3 at the Barrow-in-Furness shipyard of Vickers-Armstrong, will be seen sometime next year by Victoria residents off Ogden Point as she makes her maiden voyage to Vancouver.

Another even larger O & P liner, the 45,000-ton Canberra, is also under construction and will go into service in the Pacific early in 1961.

Oriana is 804 feet long, beam 87 feet, with a service speed of approximately 27½ knots. She cost some $35,000,000 and will accommodate 600 first-class passengers and 1,500 tourist-class passengers.

French Mayor

BONN, Germany (AP)—The West German socialist party is urging the government to rechristen warships whose names may offend NATO allies. It cited objections from the mayor of Brest, France, to a forthcoming visit of the frigate Scharnhorst, namesake of a Nazi battleship berthed at Brest in the Second World War.

Belgium's Gossip Mill

Royal Family Rows Set Tongues Going

Leopold's Beautiful Wife Goes on Holiday Alone

By WILLIAM ANDERSON

BRUSSELS (UPI)—The family just doesn't seem to get along well with each other. One son, a bachelor, hasn't been too happy since he was forced to take over the family business from his father. Another son recently got married in the midst of a squabble over whether it should be a church or a civil ceremony. And the father is apparently having some trouble with his second wife over where they'll live.

All of which would be their own private business except these are members of Belgium's royal family. The first son is King Baudouin I. His brother is Prince Albert. Their father is ex-King Leopold III.

The family's latest contribution to the grinding gossip mill is the fact that Leopold's wife, the beautiful Princess Liliane de Rethy, has twice gone on vacation without her husband.

REPORTED RIFT

The princess is reported to be unhappy over the new home the Belgian government proposed that she and Leopold move into, leaving Baudouin alone in the Laeken Palace.

But he has changed since his visit to the United States last May.

TREMENDOUS WELCOME

Baudouin got a tremendous welcome when he returned home. And the general atmosphere surrounding the royal family lightened further when the 26-year-old Albert announced he would marry the vivacious and beautiful Italian Princess Paola Ruffo de Calabria.

Then suddenly, the storm clouds gathered again when it was learned that the wedding would take place at the Vatican instead of being the civil ceremony required under Belgian law.

SOCIALISTS HOWLED

In any event, public opinion forced a change in the plans and the wedding finally took place in Brussels, last July.

No tank will be charged with any gas except "atmosphere" which must be certified free of noxious gases and oil.

NEAR TRAGEDY

It was brought to my attention this week that last Sunday at Brentwood Bay a fisherman was very slowly trolling along when suddenly he felt a bumping under his boat and, upon looking around he discovered a skin diver.

This could have been a tragedy but fortunately the boat was going slowly. I was also told that there was no diver's flag anywhere to be seen and the boat that the diver was off was quite a distance away. It is not known if this diver belonged to a club or not. It is presumed not as the clubs in this area are very safety-conscious. If they have been damaged at any time. The cylinder pressure should never exceed the maximum rated pressure stamped on the tank.

All tanks when in transit whether by car, boat or air should be securely locked, tied, or blocked to prevent them moving and becoming damaged. When carrying your tank in your car you should have the valve facing toward the rear of the car, as this will prevent damage in case you have to apply the breaks at all times.

When carrying your tank in your car you should have the valve facing toward the rear of the car, as this will prevent damage in case you have to apply the breaks at all times.

CLEANED AND TESTED

No oil or grease of any kind should be used around the tanks or regulators as they can cause oil pneumonia or flare up in the tank. All tanks should be cleaned and tested every five years or sooner if they have been damaged at any time. The cylinder pressure should never exceed the maximum rated pressure stamped on the tank.

Many divers in this area paint their tanks a yellow color so they will show up under the water, they also paint their names on them as so many of the tanks are of the same make and this makes identification easier.

Always lay the tank on its side, never stand it up or lean it against any object as it may fall and cause damage to the valve.

Pole Charged with ImpedingPrisoner's Hunger Strike Now Entering Fourth Day

A Polish immigrant charged with creating a disturbance on a downtown street Thursday is on his fourth day of a hunger strike.

Frank Patros, no fixed address, was remanded to Monday by Magistrate William Ostler yesterday pending a report on the man's condition from a physician.

Informed by the court through an interpreter that he had been charged for impeding the passage of other persons on a public street, Fort and

Government, the accused man said he did not understand the charge.

Later he said through the interpreter that "other people" were the cause of the disturbance and Magistrate Ostler said he would accept that as a plea of not guilty.

Prosecutor Angus Smith said Patros had refused to take any nourishment since he was jailed.

But so far, nobody seems to know why.

Food Stall Supplies 250 Families

More than 250 needy families received goods from the surplus food stall, yesterday in what the conserver, Mrs. E. E. Harper, termed "a bumper term."

"I don't know how to thank everyone," she said. "We had all kinds of fruits and vegetables they just poured in. And there were many more cash donations than usual, some from people we hadn't heard of. It was wonderful."

EmergencyCrises Down Planes

Emergency services at Patricia Bay airport had two brisk workouts yesterday when a navy jet and an Alaska-bound airliner made emergency landings within the space of 15 hours.

Both aircraft landed safely, and there were no injuries.

Three emergency trucks, manned by naval firefighters, roared out onto the runway at 4:30 p.m. when a naval pilot radioed that the nose wheel on his T-33 jet trainer wouldn't lock in landing position.

After making a low pass over the field, the jet, manned by Lieut. D. Munro and Sub-Lieut. I. K. Rassow from HMCS Shearwater, Halifax, made a three-point landing. It had been unable to make a scheduled landing at Vancouver because of fog.

A Pacific Northern Airlines plane with 10 passengers aboard took off for Seattle at 1:30 p.m. just over 12 hours after it made an emergency landing here. The Constellation circled the airport for 30 minutes after dumping some 800 gallons of fuel.

The plane, on a flight from Seattle to Anchorage, Alaska, developed a propeller trouble in one of its four engines. Three ambulances and firefighting equipment stood by but weren't required.

Kinsmen BingoSellout Crowd Expected

Another sellout crowd is expected to pack Memorial Arena tomorrow night for the 16th Kinsmen bingo.

Only 1,000 tickets are left, and these are expected to be snapped up Monday, either at the Eaton's box-office or at Memorial Arena starting at 7 p.m.

Top prizes in the bingo, which starts at 8 p.m., include a new car, a complete electric kitchen, a home workshop and a year's fuel supply.

Some 5,600 holders of advance tickets bought by Oct. 10 will be eligible to play special midget bingo during the intermission with a top prize of $500 and one bingo fan will be given $1 per pound for each pound he weighs.

Mute testimony to the financial state of civil servants is provided by Bob Coey, left, president of the Victoria branch of the Canadian Postal Employees' Association, and James Cox, secretary of the Victoria Federated

Association of Letter Carriers. The two associations yesterday demanded that the Civil Service Commission release its findings on salaries of government workers.—(Colonist photo.)

Urgent Telegrams SentMake Wage Report Public City Postal Workers Ask

Victoria postal employees have demanded that the Civil Service Commission make public its recent findings on civil servants' salaries.

Both the Postal Employees' Association, which includes inside staff, and the Victoria Branch 11 of the Federated Association of Letter Carriers have sent urgent telegrams to the commission.

The federal government-appointed commission has recommended wage increases for civil servants but the government has not implemented the recommendations. Robert Coey, president of the Victoria branch of the PEA, said last night.

In retaliation, local postal employees are planning to cancel Canada Savings Bonds they hold and to refuse to buy any more.

"I just got back from a civil servants' convention, and they were up in arms," Mr. Coey said last night.

We had been promised a raise by the government, and many of the civil servants in Canada purchased bonds considering that raise. Now the government has failed them, and the general feeling is, cancel the bonds you have and don't buy any more."

James Cox, secretary of the FALC, agreed with Mr. Coey, but both men felt that, locally at least, there was no truth to reports from Vancouver that there will be wholesale resignations in the ranks of postal employees.

Bill May, Vancouver president of the CPEA, had said he knew of many postmen and inside workers who were planning to resign but will wait until after Christmas. He claimed that one employee had already resigned because of the pay dispute.

"Starting salary for letter carriers is $220 a month, rising to $3,600 a year after five years' service," Mr. Cox stated. "Clerks go from $240 a month to $3,900 a year over seven years."

"But the average take-home pay ranges from $250 to $280 in the top pay brackets. It just means that no one with a family can go into civil service."

Other points in his program:

Replacement plan for roads, sewers and water mains and debt reduction payments must be continued, and the city must continue to adhere to the "pay as you go" policy.

Off-street parking accommodation should be given to a new health board setup, establishment of a juvenile and family court, new auditorium, and enforcement of bylaws.

hall, downtown malls or any other project."

Careful consideration should be given to a new health board setup, establishment of a juvenile and family court, new auditorium, and enforcement of bylaws.

"There was only one thing," he recalled last night. "I thought they should have taken saddles."

"I asked them about saddles and they said they wanted to ride bareback."

Prosecutor Angus Smith said Patros had refused to take any nourishment since he was jailed.

But so far, nobody seems to know why.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann: In April our 16-year-old daughter eloped with a boy who was also within two months of graduation. They had been going steady 18 months.

We got together with the boy's parents and had the marriage annulled. There was a tacit agreement that if they felt the same way about each other in four years we would agree to a big church wedding. Last month our daughter

Lemon of a Husband

Dear J. T. L.: You need a lawyer. I am not one.

More important than legal rights, however, is the well-being of your daughter. If the boy, after being told what a spot this girl is in, has turned his back on her and wants no talk of marriage, he would make a lemon of a husband and father.

In my opinion, she's better off to face this ordeal alone rather than be shackled to a resentful and bitter punk who would only add to her problems.

Dear Ann: Last night I had a big fight with my husband. My husband said if his father ever

Better Than Fighting

Dear K. I. M.: People have enough to do to solve the problems they meet from day to day. Here you're fighting about something that has not happened and probably never will.

Every salaried person should keep in mind that one day he may no longer have an income. It would be wise if your husband helped his dad work out a program whereby he saved a part of his weekly check—no matter how small.

This would be far better than fighting about what will happen when the old man is down and out.

Dear Ann: My mother and I can't agree and we need a middle-person. She thinks that $8 a week is enough for a 12-year-old. This is supposed to cover bus fare, lunches, spending money, movies and records. Also out of this I have to buy my friends birthday gifts and Bar Mitzvah presents.

Do you think this is fair? I don't. Thank you for being on my side.—NO NATIONAL BANK.

Dear No Bank: You're going to hate me but I think $8 is plenty for a 12-year-old girl to collect every week for just breathing, which is what most kids do these days for an allowance.

Shopping with SallyBeneath It All They're Still Frilly, Frothy

Women are still women this fall—at least under the surface. This encouraging note from a recent release indicates that despite the derbies, fedoras and broad-shouldered manish fashions, the most frothy, feminine underpinnings ever, are being made and worn.

Happiest of all are the lingerie manufacturers, who have unrolled bolts of fluttery chiffons, mache in washable lace, costly cutwork and miles of ribbon and others' frou-frou.

Lavish enough for a trouser suit, this burst of femininity isn't exclusively for brides. For lounging or boiling eggs, the business girl or the bride is now practical as well as pretty if her outfit is hard-wearing nylon.

Humphrey RitePioneer Gave Bride

Granddaughter of a pioneer Comox Valley family, Miss Lorna Edythe Surgeon, daughter of Mrs. Mildred Piggott, Obed Avenue, and the late John Edward Surgeon, became the wife of Frank Hugh Humphrey in a recent ceremony at Grace Lutheran Church.

She was given in marriage by her grandfather, Robert J. Surgeon, of Courtenay.

Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Humphrey of Victoria.

Attending the bride were Mrs. J. Slagboom, Miss Jean Cooper and Miss Karen Pigott. Best man was Mr. Leonard Humphrey of Bellevue, Wash., and ushers, Const. J. Surgenor, RCMP of Meadow Lake, Sask., and Mr. Gerry Wells of Victoria.

The wedding reception was held in the Sir William Wallace Room, Holyrood House.

Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey are making their home at 1057 Holmes Street, Victoria.

Can we have the annulment annulled? Does the fact that they were married at the time of conception give us any legal rights? Can we force this boy to contribute to the baby's support? We are comfortable, but we're not made of money.

—J. T. L.

Given in marriage by her father, Miss Ellis was charming in a creation of Chantilly lace designed on the princess line. Opalescent sequins and pearls formed her headress which secured a dainty finger-tip veil. Her flowers were red and white carnations.

Bridesmaid was Miss Geraldine Marcellus and flower girl Susan Heard.

Mr. Louis J. Lee was best man and ushers were Mr. Jack Ellis and Mr. Victor Hollefreund.

Guests were received at the home of the bride's parents.

The young couple will make their home at 2848 Dysart Road.

SALMON POTATO PUFF

Two one-pound cans of pink salmon, one 10-ounce can cream of celery soup, ½ cup chopped dill pickles, one teaspoon grated lemon rind, ½ teaspoon salt, dash pepper, six medium cooked potatoes, ½ cup scalded milk, two tablespoons butter, one teaspoon shredded sharp cheddar cheese.

Nearly every variety of Canadian fish can be found in local markets and the only problem is to find new and exciting ways to serve it.

This week would be logical time to experiment with new and different fish recipes, and here are a few samples:

In the bottom right picture, Oyster Hors D'oeuvres, there are two you might like to try.

BREADED OYSTERS

Twelve oysters, 4 tablespoons melted butter, ½ cup dry bread crumbs.

Dip oysters in butter and roll in bread crumbs. To broil, place oysters on greased broiling pan and broil until lightly browned. Turn and broil other side. Takes about two minutes. To bake, place in greased baking dish and bake at 450 degrees for 10-12 minutes. Serve at once.

OYSTER KABOBS

Two tomatoes, six slices bacon, 12 raw oysters, 12 mushrooms.

Cut each tomato into six sections. Wrap with one-half strip bacon. Place one mushroom cap, one oyster, and one tomato wedge on skewer; then repeat each of these. Arrange skewers across top of a pan. Brush with butter. If broiling, place in hot broiler, four inches from heat, and cook until bacon is broiled. If baking, use a hot oven over 400 degrees and bake 10 to 15 minutes. Yield should be six kabobs.

The scrumptious dish on the left is an all-encompassing main dish invaluable to homemakers and known as the casserole, in this case a blending of salmon and vegetables that could readily be served to either a hungry family or guests at an evening buffet.

And here's an extra special stuffing for halibut steaks.

Combine two cups dry bread crumbs with ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon thyme, few grains pepper. Cook two tablespoons chopped onion and ½ cup chopped celery in three tablespoons butter until tender but not brown. Pour into bread mixture and mix well. Pour onto halibut steaks in a baking dish and cover with stuffing. Place two more steaks, sandwich-style, on top. Brush with butter and bake in a 450-degree oven for about 25 minutes. Yields four large servings.

And here are a few handy tips to keep at your fingertips when preparing sea food:

Evaporated milk is a dandy substitute for eggs when dipping fish for frying. Dip fish into milk and then into dry bread or cracker crumbs.

To lift baked fish from a pan without breaking, place fish in a pan lined with muslin or foil. Use the foil as an extra platter when serving.

Lemon juice, squeezed on both sides of a fish steak before baking or broiling, brings out the flavor.

Life on the road (the company has travelled for the past two and a half weeks) stands, living out of suitcases and sleeping on buses.

Sheila Mackinnon, 22-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Mackinnon, arrived in town yesterday, a day before the remainder of the Winnipeg Ballet Company starring here Monday night.

DAILY REHEARSAL

The grind in a ballerina's life is the daily rehearsals from early morning to late at night. Often the Winnipeg company will run through 12 numbers in a day.

After rehearsals, the company, "like one big, nearly always happy family," will go to parties, movies, dinners together.

Sheila, a former student of Wynne Shaw is in her second season with the Winnipeg Ballet and has always wanted to dance.

She prefers the classic, traditional ballet of Swan Lake but likes to rush around in modern ballet such as the western-flavored "Whoop-De-Doo" featured on Monday night.

FRESH APPROACH

She also feels that this type of modern interpretation with its new, fresh approach is what is needed in all ballet companies to attract the younger audience.

The company has met with favorable reception so far on their tour.

When the 30-member troupe arrives this evening, they'll be treated to Mrs. Mackinnon's home-cooking, a huge turkey dinner.

On Monday evening, following the Royal Theatre performance, they'll be entertained at the Nottingham Drive home of Sharon Kirk, another Victoria light in the ballerina.

Hobbies Right on Farm Nikita Tells Red Girls

LONDON (AP)—Soviet girls don't need to quit the collective farms any more to find a husband, says Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

Seven or eight years ago, said the premier, there were few young people on the collective farm—nobody a girl could marry.

"Now, as you know, things are quite different. Now, all the good people, male and female are in no haste to leave their native villages."

DO YOU SUFFER FROM THESE SYMPTOMS OF HEARING LOSS?

- You have difficulty hearing in crowded rooms.
 - You have difficulty understanding certain words.
 - You cannot hear well in church or at the movies.
 - You have difficulty in hearing over the phone.
 - You can hear radio or TV only with high volume.
 - People have to shout or speak extra loud to you.
- You are not DEAF if you checked any or all of these symptoms

Hearing loss is not the same as deafness any more than eyestrain is the same as blindness.

If you can hear at all, chances are that Acousticon has the modern, inconspicuous attractive hearing correction you need to hear all you should again.

YOU MAY HEAR BETTER THAN YOU THINK

A simple five-minute hearing test will give you a pretty good indication of your hearing loss. There is no cost nor obligation whatever to come in, phone or write for an appointment in our office or in the privacy of your home.

Old Sea Dog Mustered Out of Royal Navy

Old sea dog, Vectis King, proudly stands his last watch after 6½ years of service in the Royal Navy as his successor, Buster Game 'Un, waits to take over as mascot of H.M.S. Victory, at the Royal Navy barracks at Portsmouth. Vectis King was given a medal for long service and good conduct in a retirement ceremony.

A LOVELIER YOU

By Marv Sue Miller

HOUSEWORK AND YOUR FEET. According to the findings of the National Foot Health Council, housewives as a group have the worst feet in the country. Far worse than even policemen or postmen! This situation is not so much due to long hours of standing as to improper footgear. It seems that the lady-of-the-house goes about her chores either in old, stretched dress shoes or old, flapping slippers. Sometimes, she flits about unshod.

None of those practices contributes to foot comfort or health. For housework, one should wear a sturdy, well-fitted shoe. Moreover, it should be laced or strapped, with not more than a one and one-half inch heel.

Since the feet perspire more in proportion to any other part of the body, the right choice of socks or stockings is also vital to happy houseworking feet. Cotton socks and footlets or nylon stockings with mercerized cotton soles are recommended, as their absorption qualities are excellent. Because bulky socks tend to cramp the feet, they should be avoided.

Among the other suggestions, this last one should provide the most welcome: Take off your shoes and prop your feet—higher than waist level—for at least five minutes, morning and afternoon.

BEAUTY OF HOUSEWORK

Attention homemakers! If housework saps your energies, looks and nerves, send for my booklet, Beauty of Housework. It explains how to keep home and self sparkling with time to spare. Also included are an effort-saving work plan, shortcuts in housekeeping, and advice on how to give yourself a beauty treatment while engaged in your duties. For your copy, write me in care of your newspaper, enclosing 20 cents in coin and a large, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Stolen Vaccine Still Good

MONTREAL (CP)—Practically all of the 75,000 shots of anti-polio vaccine stolen from the University of Montreal Aug. 31 and later recovered were reported in good condition following laboratory tests, Dr. Gustave Charest, city epidemiologist, said Thursday.

Disaster in Himalayas

When Hit
By Blizzard

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — An all-woman attempt to climb Mount Cho Oyu, the world's sixth highest mountain, was reported last night to have ended in disaster. Two women and two Sherpa guides were reported missing, presumed dead.

One of those missing was Mrs. Claude Kogan, 39, leader of the dozen women who attempted to climb the 26,846-foot peak.

SKI CHAMPION
Mrs. Kogan, 39, long has been known for her mountaineering exploits. The other missing member is Claude Van Der Straten, 26, Belgian ski champion and pin-up girl of the expedition.

The Nepal foreign office said the two women, along with Sherpa guides Angnor and Tchusang, have been missing since Oct. 1.

Other members of the expedition—which includes women from France, Britain, Switzerland, India and Belgium—were believed on their way back to Katmandu.

CLOSE TO SUMMIT

Mrs. Kogan and Miss Claudine van der Straten were close to the icy summit of 26,846-foot Chou Oyu peak when the blizzard struck them down.

The women were trying to prove they could match the skill and endurance of men who had scaled the peak twice before—Austrians in 1954 and Indians in 1958. They left here Aug. 21 and by mid-September had successfully established their base camp at 19,000 feet.

ALL-WOMAN
The all-woman expedition included Nima and Pen Pen, teenagers daughters of Sherpa Tensing Norkey, who conquered Mount Everest with Sir Edmund Hillary in 1953.

Churchill Praises Red Moon Rockets

The rockets, said the 84-year-old elder statesman, "are not just an ingenious bid for prestige."

"They are the manifestations of a formidable advance in technology . . . I do not doubt that they will ultimately reap a rich harvest for those who have the imagination and power to develop them and to probe ever more deeply into the mysteries of the universe."

Death Threatens French Politicians

PARIS (Reuters) — Secret pamphlets and telephone calls have threatened death to a number of politicians and newspaper men who advocate a liberal attitude toward the Algerian independence movement.

The threats are purported to come from a right-wing underground movement which demands full integration of the African territory with France.

Police have placed guards on some of the leading liberal and leftist politicians, including ex-premier Pierre Mendes-France.

At the same time, police pressed investigations into the attempted murder early Friday of 42-year-old Senator Francois Mitterrand, a former justice minister.

Mitterrand jumped out of his car just before the would-be killers riddled it with bullets.

Lunik Off Course

Moon Girdling Denied in U.S.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—The Soviet Union's Lunik III never circled the moon according to calculations of an American Saturday.

The Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory's Dr. Charles A. Whitney said he did not disagree with Soviet figures that their latest space vehicle had passed within 4,375 miles of the moon early this week.

However, in the trackless void of space, Dr. Whitney thinks Lunik III passed not only about three hours behind, but underneath the path of the moon.

If the moon could be visualized as leaving a trail behind it in space, a similar track left by Lunik III would not encircle the moon but only its trail, according to Dr. Whitney's computations.

Soviet statements have tended to cast no doubt that Lunik III had gone around the moon. On Oct. 7, Tass the Soviet press agency said:

"After passing point of minimum distance from the moon, the automatic interplanetary station, circumventing the moon, continues to move away from the earth and the moon."

"I'm not impressed with generals," said Archdeacon Cecil Swanson of Toronto.

"The military mind is a pretty peculiar thing. In the First World War, the general staff didn't know what was going on, and didn't seem to care. The military mind is always obsessed with the last war, and when it's over, they are prepared to fight it."

Archdeacon Swanson was interviewed Friday while in Vancouver to preach at Christ Church Cathedral, where he was formerly dean.

VANCOUVER (CP) — A leading Anglican clergyman says he finds the military mind a "pretty peculiar thing."

"I'm not impressed with generals," said Archdeacon Cecil Swanson of Toronto.

"The military mind is a pretty peculiar thing. In the First World War, the general staff didn't know what was going on, and didn't seem to care. The military mind is always obsessed with the last war, and when it's over, they are prepared to fight it."

Archdeacon Swanson was interviewed Friday while in Vancouver to preach at Christ Church Cathedral, where he was formerly dean.

Asked about disarmament, he said: "I'm for it, although the church has made no official statement . . ."

"But you don't necessarily get peace through disarmament. It's necessary to develop understanding and fellowship among nations. Peace will follow."

On nuclear explosions: "I have a feeling the top scientists are getting their message across about the danger. I think the nations involved are becoming increasingly conscience-stricken about the things they have been doing."

'Storms' (If They Fit) Keep Fuel Costs Down

By GORDON DONALDSON
Special to the Colonist

You can save on fuel by insulating your home—but there are limits.

Last week I felt something had to be done.

Soon the fuel bills will rise horribly.

I decided to double-glaze all the fixed windows in the house, put small, removable wooden frames over the opening sections of window, and have doors fitted professionally.

Double-glazing, theoretically, forms a barrier of dead air between the two sheets of glass, preventing cold air, or moisture creeping in.

If it's done properly, there should be no need to remove the outer layer for cleaning.

If not—well, if you got the glass in you should be able to get it out again.

The largest panes I had to tackle were four feet by three. I wouldn't advise anybody to try a picture window.

On my window frames, and on most types where there is an area of fixed glass that doesn't open, there was a small wooden ridge three-quarters of an inch outside the glass running all the way around the frame.

I put a thin layer of putty around this ridge, fitted the glass against it, and nailed a strip of 3/4-round moulding on top, putting it in.

This sounds easy. If the window frames and the glass were all the same size it would be.

In fact, if I had ordered the glass cut 1/8 inch too small instead of the exact size (and therefore too big) it would have been no bother at all.

As it was, I had to gouge chunks out of the window frames to get the glass in. I also broke a pane of glass by tapping a nail which just hit the edge, cracking it across.

But the crash and tinkle of glass on the gentle autumn air are on the indispensable part of storm-making.

House Acts as Babysitter

By HELEN PARMELEE
Special to the Colonist

Have you ever heard of a "baby-sitting house?"

Neither had I! But that was before I set foot inside the new split-level home of builder Harley Smith and family.

How can a house—made of brick-and-mortar and with no feelings—mind a baby?

Well, it can't change diapers; but it does this much:

If Mrs. Smith is cooking dinner in the kitchen she can hear baby Robin make the slightest whimper in his bed-room one floor above.

Mrs. Smith can relax in the living room while their children romp in the indoor pool one floor below. If there's a lull in the splashing below they know something needs looking into.

The house's secret is an intercom system in every room

SAVES ENERGY

It saves endless unnecessary steps around the house; and when there are five levels to contend with, that can mean a lot of energy preserved.

All Mrs. Smith has to do is leave the intercom on in the nursery; and she can work around the house for hours without worrying about the baby.*

LIVING SHOWCASE

Mr. Smith is a Toronto builder, and his new air conditioned home is a living showcase of the latest and most practical in building materials and ideas.

One striking feature is the use of brick inside the house. One wall of the elongated entrance hall is of buff brick, same color as the facade. A wall in the den is a squared-off pattern of different colors of brick forming a design.

WALLS OF BRICK

utting out to put ornaments on.

Then there's the concealed lighting effect throughout the house, all controlled by master switches in the bedroom and kitchen.

Throughout the house is wood paneling in practically every room. Finishes range from California redwood in the living room to mahogany and walnut in other rooms.

MUCH BUILT-IN

Many pieces of furniture are built in, designed by Mr. Smith. Bed headboards, extra-long dressers and desks are built-in as are the dining room buffet and an enormous stereo-TV cabinet in the family room.

The piece de resistance, of course, is the indoor heated swimming pool.

Right beside the pool is a magnificent family room that's ideal for partying.

Directly above the pool is a 29 by 40 foot tile terrace with a view of the ravine on which the house is built to fit.

And here's a boon to the harried housewife! Mrs. Smith has an electronic air cleaner which takes ninety per cent of the dust out of the air.

The Blue Water

By JOHN FREDERIC GIBSON

Across the road the green, starboard light of the Princess Mary glitters with faint irony. To the south is a facade, a bright, floodlit exterior behind which are deserted offices. Behind that the wharf, cold in the night wind.

Alongside the wharf are the tugs, dark silhouettes. Their names are just visible in the last moments of daylight. Island Imp, Island Mariner, Island Comet and the rest.

This is the Island Tug and Barge wharf. From that little office calls go out across the Pacific to Japan or maybe down to Chile. And the tugs go out too, winter and summer, to Kitimat and Vancouver, San Francisco and Alaska.

NOTHING MOVES

However, nothing moves tonight. It is only possible to sit above where the waves slip between the hulls and watch the lights of the city and the cars crossing the Bay Street Bridge and think about the world of tugs.

Unspoiled Gem Found

Ancient Town Stays Off Beaten Track

By JIM REVITT
Special to the Colonist

SPOLETO, Italy.—In 1218 St. Francis of Assisi climbed to the summit of Monteluco, overlooking Spoleto, central Italy, and said:

"I have never seen anything more pleasant than my Spoleto valley."

To this day visitors to Spoleto echo the venerable traveler's inspired opinion.

Set on a hill that forms one side of Tessino gorge kilometers north of Rome, the town is perched above olive groves and winding green valleys.

Although only two hours by train from the capital, Spoleto convinces each new visitor that he has discovered an unspoiled gem. This is rare enough in these days of mass-organized tourism.

All this in the shadows of stone walls and towers that date back to the Roman Empire, and which repulsed a not very well-intentioned tourist called Hannibal.

The great, grey bulk of the 14th-century Papal Fortress, now a prison, dominates the town.

From it a 600-year-old bridge arches spectacularly across Tessino gorge. The bridge is a feat of engineering, 700 feet long and more than 250 feet high.

The old part of town spills downhill from the fort, a crazy jumble of narrow, cobbled streets and alleys twisting under ancient arches, past fountains and places centuries old.

Pole Charged with Impeding

Prisoner's Hunger Strike Now Entering Fourth Day

A Polish immigrant charged with creating a disturbance on a downtown street Thursday is on his fourth day of a hunger strike.

Frank Patros, no fixed address, was remanded to Monday by Magistrate William Ostler yesterday pending a report on the man's condition from a physician.

Informed by the court through an interpreter that he had been charged for impeding the passage of other persons on a public street, Fort and

Government, the accused man said he did not understand the charge.

Later he said through the interpreter that "other people" were the cause of the disturbance and Magistrate Ostler said he would accept that as a plea of not guilty.

Prosecutor Angus Smith said Patros had refused to take any nourishment since he was jailed.

But so far, nobody seems to know why.

Food Stall Supplies 250 Families

More than 250 needy families received goods from the surplus food stall yesterday in what the convenor, Mrs. E. E. Harper, termed "a bumper crop day."

"I don't know how to thank everyone," she said. "We had all kinds of fruits and vegetables, they just poured in. And there were many more cash donations than usual, some from people we had never heard of. It was wonderful."

Emergency

Crises Downs Planes

Emergency services at Patricia Bay airport had two brisk workouts yesterday when a navy jet and an Alaska-bound airliner made emergency landings within the space of 15 hours.

Both aircraft landed safely, and there were no injuries.

Three emergency trucks, manned by naval firefighters, roared out onto the runway at 4:30 p.m. when a naval pilot radioed that the nose wheel on his T-33 jet trainer wouldn't lock in landing position.

After making a low pass over the field, the jet, manned by Lieut. D. Munro and Sub-Lieut. I. K. Rassow from HMCS Shearwater, "Halifax," made a three-point landing. It had been unable to make a scheduled landing at Vancouver because of fog.

A Pacific Northern Airlines plane with 10 passengers aboard took off for Seattle at 1:30 p.m. just over 12 hours after it made an emergency landing here. The Super-Constellation circled the airport for 30 minutes after dumping some 800 gallons of fuel.

The plane, on a flight from Seattle to Anchorage, Alaska, developed propeller trouble in one of its four engines. Three ambulances and firefighting equipment stood by but weren't required.

Kinsmen Bingo

Sellout Crowd Expected

Another sellout crowd is expected to pack Memorial Arena tomorrow night for the 16th Kinsmen giant bingo.

Only 1,000 tickets are left, and these are expected to be snapped up Monday, either at the Eaton's box-office or at Memorial Arena starting at 7 p.m.

Top prizes in the bingo, which starts at 8 p.m., include a new car, a complete electric kitchen, a home workshop and a year's fuel supply.

Some 5,600 holders of advance tickets bought by Oct. 10 will be eligible to play special midget bingo during the intermission with a top prize of $100 and one bingo fan will be given $1 per pound for each pound he weighs.

Mute testimony to the financial state of civil servants is provided by Bob Coey, left, president of the Victoria branch of the Canadian Postal Employees' Association, and James Cox, secretary of the Victoria Federated

Association of Letter Carriers. The two associations yesterday demanded that the Civil Service Commission release its findings on salaries of government workers.—(Colonist photo.)

Urgent Telegrams Sent

Make Wage Report Public City Postal Workers Ask

Victoria postal employees have demanded that the Civil Service Commission make public its recent findings on civil servants' salaries.

Both the Postal Employees' Association, which includes inside staff, and the Victoria Branch 11 of the Federated Association of Letter Carriers, have sent urgent telegrams to the commission.

The federal government-appointed commission has recommended wage increases for civil servants but the government has not implemented the recommendations. Robert Coey, president of the Victoria branch of the PEA, said last night.

In retaliation, local postal employees are planning to cancel Canada Savings Bonds they hold and to refuse to buy any more.

"I just got back from a civil servants' convention, and they were up in arms," Mr. Coey said last night.

"We had been promised a raise by the government, and many of the civil servants in Canada purchased bonds considering that raise. Now the government has failed them, and the general feeling is, cancel the bonds you have and don't buy any more."

James Cox, secretary of the FALC, agreed with Mr. Coey, but both men felt that, locally at least, there was no truth to reports from Vancouver that there will be wholesale resignations in the ranks of postal employees.

Bill May, Vancouver president of the CPEA, had said he knew of many postmen and inside workers who were planning to resign but will wait until after Christmas. He claimed that one employee had already resigned because of the pay dispute.

"Starting salary for letter carriers is $220 a month, rising to $3,600 a year after five years' service," Mr. Cox stated.

"Clerks go from $240 a month to $3,900 a year" over seven years.

"But the average take-home pay ranges from $250 to $280 in the top pay brackets. It just means that no one with a family can go into civil service."

Fringe benefits have not been altered in 60 years. Employees get three weeks' holiday a year, 1½ days cumulative sick leave a month, a death benefit fund, and superannuation after they retire at 60 years. They are working on some kind of joint medical-surgical plan where the government pays half the cost, but it is not in operation yet," Mr. Cox added.

Mr. Adams said Carale's pony is normally a quiet one and that he found it difficult to believe it could have become seriously upset by the mere passing of a car.

"That pony has been ridden a lot where there is traffic," he said.

Mr. Adams said Carale and Berna telephoned him yesterday morning to ask if they could ride in the afternoon.

He said it would be all right and he helped the two girls ride their horses.

Other points in his program:

Replacement plan for roads, sewers and water mains and debt reduction payments must be continued, and the city must continue to adhere to the "pay as you go" policy.

Off-street parking accommodation should be treated as the first and most important project of the city at present. "I believe that this is more important than hall, downtown malls or any other project."

Careful consideration should be given to a new health board setup, establishment of a juvenile and family court, new auditorium, and enforcement of bylaws.

ALD. M. H. MOONEY

There was only one thing," he recalled last night. "I thought they should have taken saddles."

"I asked them about saddles and they said they wanted to ride bareback."

Responsibility

May Rest With Speeder

A 14-year-old Saanich girl was in only fair condition and undergoing emergency surgery in St. Joseph's Hospital here last night after a fall from a horse yesterday afternoon.

Suffering serious head injuries is Carale Cookson, 291 Colquitz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Cookson.

Carale was thrown to the pavement by her mount, a Welsh pony gelding, on Wilkinson Road a short distance south of the West Saanich Road shortly after 1 p.m.

CAR PASSED

Her companion on the ride, 17-year-old Berna Pedneault, 2916 Colquitz, said a car which passed the horses at excessive speed may have been responsible for the accident.

"I didn't see Carale fall," Berna said later.

"She was riding behind me and when I reached the stop sign on Wilkinson Road the car had already gone by and when I looked back I saw Carale's horse running towards me but on the other side of the road."

FIX HER BOOT

"I thought Cazale had dismounted to fix her boot or something and her horse had run away from her."

"Her horse turned into a yard there and I went after it and caught it in a field."

"Then I went back for Carale and found three cars stopped and Carale lying on the road."

"She lost a lot of blood, but she was still conscious when the ambulance came about eight minutes later."

EIGHTH

"In the ambulance she was delirious."

Berna said she and Carale had decided to ride bareback yesterday, adding that her companion was "a very good rider."

Her opinion of Carale's horsemanship was shared yesterday by Floyd Adams, 289 Adelaide, owner of the two horses which the girls were riding.

RIDDEN IN SHOWS

"Carale has ridden horses for me in shows and she has ridden that pony hundreds of times," he told The Colonist yesterday.

He said Carale's pony is normally a quiet one and that he found it difficult to believe it could have become seriously upset by the mere passing of a car.

"That pony has been ridden a lot where there is traffic," he said.

SEVERAL YEARS

"Carale has been riding for several years. I don't know just how long, but she is a good rider."

"I have a boy who is six years old who rides the same pony."

"I have seen horses buck under Carale but I have never seen her thrown."

Mr. Adams said Carale and Berna telephoned him yesterday morning to ask if they could ride in the afternoon.

He said it would be all right and he helped the two girls ride their horses.

ONLY ONE THING

"There was only one thing," he recalled last night. "I thought they should have taken saddles."

"I asked them about saddles and they said they wanted to ride bareback."

'Golden Ribbon' Will Adorn Esquimalt

Heartily in favor of ribbon development—for a special kind—for Esquimalt, Reeve A. C. Wurtele accepted eight packages of tulip bulbs yesterday from 10-year-old Barbara Jean Tredwell, representing Esquimalt Girl Guides and Brownies. Similar bulbs were presented to Lt.-Cdr. E. S. Cassells, RCN, and Major R. F. Bruce. Presentation was part of the "golden ribbon" plan to mark the 50th anniversary of the Girl Guide movement with yellow tulips across Canada.—(Colonist photo.)

Bicycle-Truck Crash Injures Cowichan Lad

NORTH COWICHAN — A 10-year-old boy is in King's Daughters' Hospital at Duncan suffering serious head injuries he received when the bicycle he was riding collided with a truck near his home.

Dennis Flynn, son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Flynn of Tzouhalem Road, suffered a fractured skull.

"It wasn't the trucker's fault—the little monkey was going too fast," said the boy's mother yesterday.

She said his bike evidently went out of control while he was riding down Church Road Hill near St. Peter's Church and then shot out to busy Tzouhalem Road.

Driver of the truck was Albert G. Colk, 955 MacDonald Street, Duncan, who was driving west toward Duncan when the accident occurred, about 5:45 p.m. Friday.

Registration will be limited to 30 owing to lack of class rooms.

CAMPBELL RIVER — A power squadron has been formed for owners of small boats to promote and teach safe and proper handling, thorough knowledge of navigation, rules of the water and safety requirements.

Commander F. R. Sadd has consented to act as instructor. Permission will be sought from School District 67 to hold future meetings in the drafting room at Chemainus High School, Cobble Hill.

Four courses—piloting of power and sail boats, dressmaking, shorthand and home building—have already started at Cowichan High School with a satisfactory enrolment.

Courses offered at George Bonner High School include typewriting, woodworking and dressmaking.

PARKSVILLE—Girl Guides and Brownies are awaiting the arrival of 200 tulip bulbs from Holland to plant as part of a Canada-wide golden jubilee celebration.

Part of the shipment will go to the Errington Brownie Pack and the remainder will be planted at the Parish Hall by the Parksville Guides and Brownies in gratitude for support received since the formation of the Guide movement here.

PORT ALBERNI — Rites will be held in St. Andrew's United Church, Alberni, at 2 p.m. Tuesday for Mrs. Laura Andrea Gislason, 56, who died in Vancouver General Hospital Oct. 16.

Mrs. Gislason, of Icelandic descent, was born in Lundar, Manitoba, and had lived in this district for 14 years.

Rev. R. Rodgers of Alberni, and Rev. Brynjolfson of Vancouver, will conduct services in the church and at Alberni Valley Memorial Gardens.

CHEMAINUS — A power squadron has been formed for owners of small boats to promote and teach safe and proper handling, thorough knowledge of navigation, rules of the water and safety requirements.

Under the new Public School Act, settlement for 1960 wages must be made by Dec. 21. Last year, the teachers received an increase of 10 per cent from an arbitration board hearing.

This year's demands were recently termed "a greedy request" by J. Craig Reid, chairman of the Qualicum Beach Village Council.

NANAIMO—It's been a bad month for violinists in the Nanaimo Symphony Orchestra.

With a Christmas concert in the planning stage, the orchestra has lost three violinists through accidents. Bobby Strain has a fractured wrist; Jerry Melissa, a broken finger, and Stanley Wardill, a badly cut arm.

Spring concert of the symphony will be conducted by Australian conductor Sir Bernard Heinze.

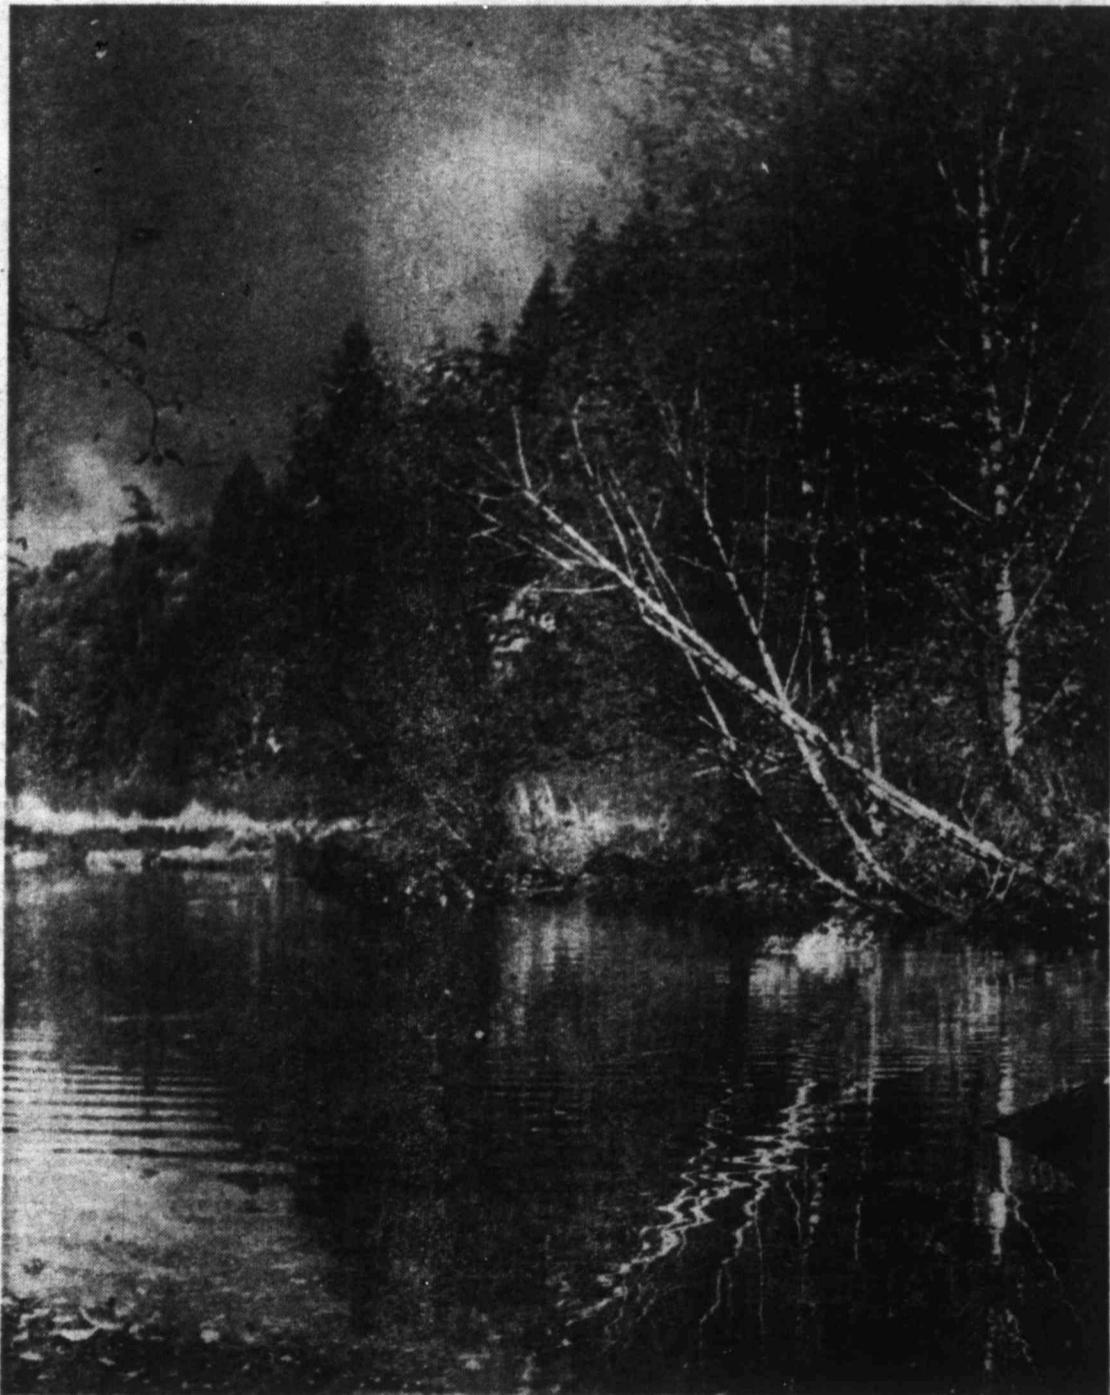

About 50 seiners working waters from Victoria north to Campbell River are harvesting a rich haul of herring, according to reports yesterday.

More than 15,000 tons of a 50,000-ton quota have been taken since the season opened Oct. 7. Dr. J. C. Stevenson, assistant fisheries director for B.C. and the Yukon, said the haul could be the best since 1956.

At Cairo the Leaders Met and Talked of CHURCHILL, Roosevelt, Stalin . . . Cairo, Yalta, Teheran, Potsdam. Those names, those places, embrace the great events and great decisions which put their stamp not only on the closing years of the Second World War but on the world as it is today.

What went on at those historic conferences? Always there was the bromide communique, always the facade of cordiality and agreement.

But those who were close to the principals of those hidden dramas have somewhat different recollections.

At the end of 1943 Britain's Prime Minister Winston Churchill went to meet President F. D. Roosevelt in Cairo before their conference with Josef Stalin in Teheran. He sailed in HMS Renown, but he was not well on the voyage, and when the ship put in at Malta he went to stay at the Governor's Palace. There General Ismay, deputy secretary to the War Cabinet, and General Leslie Hollis went to visit him.

"We found him lying in an enormous bed, looking like a pink-wax cherub, and clearly feeling very unwell, and rather sorry for himself," recalls General Hollis.

"He perked up when we brought him some cables, however, and suddenly made a most strange request. In a pathetic voice he asked: 'Could you please go back to that nice ship and bring me a little pat of butter?'"

They returned through the ruined streets with a pound of butter wrapped in brown paper for the prime minister and also brought back a message which had caused great concern.

President Roosevelt had been advised by his Intelligence authorities that Cairo was unsafe as a meeting place. They claimed to have received information that an attempt would be made on his life.

Was it possible to have the venue changed?

"Certainly," said Churchill. "We will have the conference here. Pray have the necessary arrangements made."

Hollis, however, found he had been given an impossible task.

In Malta at that time it was not possible to find even one hotel that could supply more than the barest essentials of shelter, with the crudest service.

Hollis reported this to Churchill with some trepidation.

"I accept your decision," said Churchill at once. "I will inform the president accordingly."

MR. ROOSEVELT thereupon decided to brave the risk of assassination and go on to Cairo.

Residents of the Mena House Hotel were evacuated to make way for the five-day conference. Troops set up barbed-wire fences around the area, enclosing three square miles; and 34 villas in the vicinity were also commandeered in seven "defensive zones."

Roosevelt arrived hidden behind the curtains of his bulletproof car (which he called "My county jail").

He was led in by two outriders, with two Jeeps, each containing four soldiers with sub-machine guns, and a command car armed with a machine gun.

While austerity gripped Britain, entering her fifth year of wartime shortages, delegates at the Mena House were provided for the duration of the conference with 22,000-lb. of meat, 78,000 eggs, 800-lb. of turkey, 4,600-lb. of sugar, 5,000 tins of fruit; half a million cigarettes, and 1,500 cigars.

The bar on the main floor was often doing business from 9 in the morning until midnight, one result of which was seen during a long and involved discussion in the President's villa about the date of the proposed Second Front landings.

Mr. Churchill sent Hollis back to the hotel to collect some details regarding tides in the English Channel.

"To reach the hotel, eight miles away, then find this information and bring it back took me 40 minutes," writes General Hollis.

"On my return I was horrified to find that an American colleague had meantime fallen asleep, and had taken no notes at all of the war's most important discussion about the invasion of Europe.

The possible consequences appalled me, and afterwards I tackled him with this unforgivable laziness. He looked at me with pained bloodshot eyes and said: Now see here, Jo, don't get mad at me. I'd got one hell of a hangover, and couldn't take in everything that the big brass were talking about!"

"Fortunately, when I showed General Ismay where my records had been interrupted, although he had not taken a single note during the meeting, he recited with complete accuracy everything that had been said in my absence . . ."

It was nearly winter, even in Egypt, but while the President appeared most of the time in a sober blue-grey suit, Churchill dazzled everyone by alternating between his zip-up siren suit and a brilliant white sharkskin suit, with a five-gallon cowboy hat on top.

ON NOV. 27 the Prime Minister and the President flew on to Teheran, where Stalin had already preceded them.

"Despite Stalin's ill-fitting uniform," writes Hollis, "his quiet, impassive figure, with the bushy hair and iron-grey moustache, had about it a magnetic, almost majestic quality.

"He was a living enigma. Only once did he become visibly angry, when, at a dinner given by Churchill at the Brit-

OPERATION OVERLORD

This is the continuing story, condensed from Major-General Sir Leslie Hollis' book, "War At the Top," by James Leasor. Here a new and bright light is shed upon the three great leaders of the Allied side, when the West gave succour to the East.

Soon would come the thunder of the bombs and guns . . . and the Allies would swoop from the west upon Hitler's Fortress Europe. Here, in a French village, a Canadian tank and infantrymen push up a littered lane.

Ish Legation on his 69th birthday. General Sir Alan Brooke remarked that the British had suffered more than any of the Allies in the war.

"Stalin at once stood up and replied that this was primarily a war of machines, and since most of the machines were produced by America, it was the Americans who were winning the war for the Allies."

The subject that Stalin was interested in was the invasion of Europe — Operation Overlord.

When Stalin was shown a copy of the Overlord plan, he asked a question or two, and then said just one word: WHEN?"

In the end, the Overlord question was settled, and this time even the date, May 1, was agreed.

Apart from these matters of high policy, two incidents remain very clearly in Hollis' mind:

"The first was the presentation to Stalin of a beautifully jewelled and inscribed sword, the Sword of Stalingrad.

"After a general salute of Russian and British guards of honor, Mr. Churchill advanced, and with a bow handed the sword to Stalin, who raised it to his lips and kissed the bright blade, and then passed it over to Marshal Voroshilov, who, to my mind, had been drinking.

"Voroshilov fumbled with the sword and dropped it on the ground. Stalin withered him with a look.

"The marshal picked it up shamefacedly and the ceremony went on. I have often wondered what Stalin said to him afterwards.

"The second incident took place at Mr. Churchill's birthday dinner party in the British Legation.

The Russian speeches were interpreted by a Mr. Pavlov.

"During the first of Stalin's speeches I noticed that a mountainous ice-cream, about three feet high and of the most complicated design, was being served.

"The room was very warm, and as the waiter gave us each a portion, his hand trembled, and the gigantic confection began to slide from the plate.

"For a moment we thought with horror that it would land on Stalin's head, but it just missed him and fell over Mr. Pavlov in a cascade of cream and melting mush.

"Mr. Pavlov was quite equal to the disaster. He did not even wipe the mess from his hair. He stood erect as ever. 'Mr. Stalin,' he continued, 'he says . . .'

"Thereafter, even Montgomery's former critics had no doubt of his ability.

"In one corner of the grounds stood a tower like a minaret, and here Churchill, Beaverbrook, Montgomery, and I would sit and watch the evening sun go down over the desert in all its glory and splendor.

"For a few moments our conversation would turn to this astonishingly beautiful sight, and then back it would go to the unending topic: the Impending Second Front, which Churchill was convinced was the only way in which we could lose the war."

A BRAWLING, SPRAWLING IMMENSITY: the NWT WHAT'S GOOD ABOUT IT?

THE OUTSIDE WORLD has little conception of the vastness of Canada's Northwest Territories.

Northern Canada is divided into three parts: the Yukon to the west of the Coast Range; the Northwest Territories to the east of that; and Keewatin, mostly an ice-bound land reaching up and around Hudson's Bay. Ungava and Labrador lie to the east again.

The MacKenzie District of the N.W.T. alone is larger than Europe; this area lies between longitudes 100 and 140, and latitudes 60 to 70. North of this are all the islands of the Polar Seas which belong in the Mackenzie District.

All this vast district is administered from Fort Smith, by a man and his office staff. Law and order are maintained by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police whose headquarters are at Fort Smith.

So it seemed the logical place to go and I flew there. Everyone flies there, there is no other way to go. Gone forever are the good old days of paddle-steamers on the Slave and Athabasca rivers, coming north from Fort McMurray which is railhead. No more travel by horse or horse-drawn vehicles. All these things are out of date and air travel has taken their place.

Even as we soared 10,000 feet high out of Hay River I searched for but never saw the far shores of the Great Slave. We left it behind and flew southeasterly, over grim and desolate country with patches of scrub trees and no other sign of life; nothing but scrub and muskeg and pools, all as flat as a table. One might have been flying over a moon world.

There was an Eskimo woman in the plane who had never flown before and she kept looking nervously down and got more and more restless. As we lost height she miscalculated the distance to earth and desperately eager to get back to the world of sanity that she knew she ran to the door and tried to pry it open and jump. The stewardess restrained her with difficulty.

The airport at Fort Smith is an immense clearing, two miles square, surrounded by the low, thick brush of these parts, poplar, silver birch and willow.

There was a delegation here, a small crowd waiting to see a resident off to Edmonton. Among them I noticed a tall woman with a clever face who smiled at me. In the confusion I could see no sort of public taxi that would take me to the hotel.

On these occasions I have found it a good idea to sit still and look bewildered. If you do that people come to your aid. Whereas if you bustle around and show your independence, nobody does. You "go it alone." So I sat there watching the Eskimo woman being loaded into an ambulance. She was dressed in a parka and trousers of some sort of hide, and the hood of the parka fringed with fur came over her head. Her face was fat and flat and shiny with grease; her slit eyes darted hither and thither partly in curiosity, but mostly in fear. Poor woman, she had been brought down from her native haunts for treatment, probably tuberculosis.

Meanwhile Mrs. Taylor had come back to me. "Can we give you a lift down to the hotel?" I accepted her offer with gratitude. Her husband, I learned, was one of the top executives of the government. Later I stayed a few days with them; for as long as I was in Fort Smith, in fact. They were very kind to me, these people, and it was heartwarming to come across such a welcome to a stranger.

THE HOTEL HERE is one of the ugliest buildings I ever saw, and the only place to stay. It cost $8.50 a night. It's a huge oblong building like a prison, dark grey. There are no eaves to the roof and the windows are flush with the walls. Inside there is a sort of veneer of civilization but that was spoiled by the adjacent cafe that opened out of the hall. It was a cacophony of noise all day and most of the night—juke-boxes, shouting, arguing—the clientele is just about as tough as they come.

In Fort Smith everyone is government. Except for a few travelling salesmen, here today and gone tomorrow, there is no one else. And, of course, to government people, being on a high northern salary with a bonus to offset the cost of living, high prices don't matter much.

Everything IS high here as everything has to be flown in. Bread is 38c, cigarettes 50c, a lettuce 60c, bananas 20c each. A woman ordered some strawberries for a party, in June, and she had to pay $1.90 for one small hallock when they were selling 10c down south. For transients it is a question of survival in the face of fabulous finance.

Fifty years ago only Indians and Eskimos knew this part of the north. Then came the white man, attracted by the fur; then the prospector who found that there were a lot more valuable commodities to be taken from the north than pelts.

With his findings came more white men. In the past 20 years the population of the MacKenzie District alone has increased from a mere 867 to 4,915. Quite a lot. The Eskimo population has increased still more, about 65 per cent of them under 25 years ago.

About 1911 there came to Fort Smith the first Indian agent to establish an agency in the N.W.T. for the MacKenzie District. He was to have charge of all Eskimos, and of Indians—Crees, Slaveys, Yellowknives, Dogribis.

I had a long talk with the widow of this pioneer, an Anglican clergyman. Mrs. Caud was living in Edmonton and thought of a great age she has a host of friends and a wealth of memories. She is good company.

SHE TOLD ME that she and her husband were first sent to Fort Simpson to establish an agency. That is much further west and in a more beautiful country. But isolated. Her nearest neighbor was 100 miles away, so it took about two days' travel through bush country—no roads—to get tea with the neighbor, and this trip was made with horses and democrat or some such vehicle.

Then came to move to Fort Smith, and here the Cards really established themselves—and the settlement. They enclosed about 29 acres in a white picket fence and, with Indians to help, the trees were thinned out, carefully selected, and the ground all nicely cleared and sown down to grass. The result in the years that followed was a parklike place that might have belonged to an English country estate.

This is still a beautiful place though now it is the compound of the RCMP. The white picket fence still stands.

Then the Cards, with the help of Indians, made a huge vegetable garden so as to provide plenty all the year round. They planted strawberries and rhubarb, and these, with the wealth of wild berries to be found in the woods, provided all the fruit they needed. There was always lots of fish and plenty of game birds, so the agency was never short of food.

Otherwise all their supplies came from Edmonton by rail to McMurray, thence by river-boat down the Slave River as far as the dangerous rapids which continue for an 18-mile stretch so that everything has to be portaged for the remaining distance to Fort Smith.

Nearly every house worth the name here is a government house. Many of these cost $25,000 to build and outfit, with, one would think, a rather unnecessary standard of luxury. It is doubtful whether Canadian taxpayers would approve all the chrome fittings, the fluorescent lighting, the tiled bathrooms, and all the paint and enamel that has been squandered on these houses where government employees live only temporarily.

Also these two-storyed houses look entirely out of place in the bush of the far north. They are incongruous. The original log house would be in better taste, easier to heat, and most certainly longer lasting.

In its current mania for educating everybody and everything willy-nilly, the government has poured into the MacKenzie District a horde of educationists: teachers, supervisors, inspectors, superintendents, and all their underlings. All have to be provided with housing. The bachelors have their own apartment block, unmarried women another.

There is the federal school, the Indian residential school, the hospital, the nurses' residence, and several others, all big buildings.

There are government planes to carry those who have to go right up to the Arctic, all over the vast district, organizing and supervising the instruction of the Eskimos and the education of the Indians.

The Eskimos, they say, are natural-born mechanics; the Indians make better carpenters.

In some cases, one must admit, this kind of forcible feeding has done much good. But by and large, it is too much like trying to polish a deal table, to make silk out of cotton. In too many cases these forcibly-educated children return home to their families and live in a state of confused dissatisfaction for evermore.

THE RESIDENTS of Fort Smith seem to enjoy their life and make their own amusements: badminton, curling, plays, sing-songs, picnics. Talking of this last, a party told me they went on a picnic once last summer when the weather and the locale were, unluckily, too favorable for mosquitoes, and they had to eat their lunch in the car with all the windows shut.

Up here talk of "the coast" means, of course, the Arctic coast. "Outside" means anywhere outside Fort Smith.

Walking along the trails in the dust—no paved roads here and the dust is ankle-deep—you have a sense of impermanence, of a spot of civilization forced down too quickly on the wilderness. Indian children shout and play in the mounds of dust alongside, thereby giving themselves ear and nose troubles; the sweet scent of bursting cottonwood buds fills the air; above small planes set out on trips of hundreds of miles to far points to haul in more Eskimos and Indians to be taught the white man's way of life, or to bring in a sick person or an accident case, or a criminal that needs correction.

But nobody has a garden. They are here too short a time to make it worth while.

Above every other sound you hear the never-ending roar of the rapids on the Slave, 18 miles of hidden rocks over which the swift water whirls and cascades. The Slave has been responsible for many deaths.

The lovely 29-acre compound of the Mounted Police is beautifully kept and is still parklike and peaceful. It is used as a public golf course. There are buildings for the married couples and bachelor quarters for the single. Here at headquarters there are 12 to 15 men, and there are outlying posts at Hay River, Akavik at the mouth of the MacKenzie, Tuktoyaktuk on the Arctic, Norman Wells where the oil comes from, Reliance, Coppermine, Resolution, and other places.

Here again, as in Hay River, there is no telephone to the outside world, and no radio will work. Even in the police barracks they have to listen to "Moscow Molly" if they want news.

The Mounties here are just as spick and span as they are in the city, with boots and belts well polished; there is nothing slack or slipshod about their dress or their discipline.

A large sergeant was told off to show me the dogs, over which he had special charge. However the teams were only out a couple of times last winter. These dogs struck me as very small compared to the huskies of the Yukon. But they are bred to pull and are the real thing. Some of them had the light blue eye which is the hallmark of the Arctic dog.

When the curfew sounds at 10 o'clock in Fort Smith, all the dogs in the settlement begin to howl, you can hear them a long way off, tenors, basses and coloratura sopranos.

So I flew out, over Lake Athabasca and McMurray, to Edmonton, and again saw nothing but desolation and clouds.

The West Coast Story

By

GEORGE NICHOLSON

CORTES, THE CONQUEROR of Mexico, must be given credit for establishing the first lighthouse on North America's west coast. It was constructed outside the harbor entrance of Salina Cruz, near the middle of the 16th century. It was a square structure in which a blazing fire was lighted at nightfall. Cortes ordered it built to guide the Spanish galleons and caravels into safe harborage.

Fuel for the braziers was difficult to obtain and it is said that the light often went unattended. When the wind blew, the blaze was hidden in billows of smoke. Coal fires were undependable for visibility, being brilliant to windward but generally enveloped in smoke to leeward.

Notwithstanding Spain's fabulously rich trade between the Philippines and Mexico, beacons failed to mark the hazardous stretches of the western Pacific shores. And in spite of the loss of many Spanish vessels, the government paid little attention to the problem.

Captain Sebastian Cermenon, master of the galleon San Agustin, was given orders in 1594 to "chart all harbors homebound" on his way back from the Philippines.

His galleon made her landfall off the coast of northern California and came to anchor near Point Reyes. She was deeply laden with silks, porcelain, gold and beeswax. All but a handful of her crew went ashore to work on a small boat being built for charting and survey purposes. Others were seeking fresh water.

A flash storm suddenly struck, bringing with it a sticky mist and heavy seas. Cermenon's men tried in vain to reach the galleon. Every effort failed. The seas built a monstrous barrier between them and the ship. Those on the San Agustin tried to make sail when the anchors failed to hold. The canvas was ripped to shreds and the groaning ship began to work on the rocks.

As night approached, huge bonfires were built to warn the vessel away. When the last ember had died and the weather cleared, the gnarled bones of the galleon lay battered on the rocks. Her priceless cargo was lost, and those on board perished.

Often was this story repeated during the Spanish reign. When Spain's power began to wane, Mexico's west coast was almost as unprotected as when Cortes erected his beacon at Salina Cruz. A feeble cannon shot, an open bonfire or a light suspended from a pole, was the ultimate in Spanish attempts to protect shipping.

VANCOUVER ISLAND also had its makeshift lighthouses. Captain Napoleon Fitz Stubbs of the Gloucestershire Regiment, came out to this coast in the merchant ship Athelstan in 1860, and a few years later settled on Stubbs Island (named after him), in Clayoquot Sound, where he established a store. When a trading schooner was due, he lit a huge bonfire at the end of the mile-long sandspit. The smoke by day, or flames by night, guided the captain to his store.

A modern lighthouse now stands on Lennard Island at the entrance to Clayoquot Sound.

Beacon fires on Whiffin Spit were also used to guide the sealing schooners into Sooke Harbor. They were lit by the families of the Indian hunters. For ages, the lighting of bonfires was resorted to by the Indians when visiting tribes from other parts of the coast were expected; or when a canoe failed to show up after hunting whales and seals.

THE FIRST LIGHTHOUSE north of the Mexican border, however, was built at New Archangel, Sitka, the Russia capital of Alaska, in 1837. It was incorporated with Governor Alexander Baranof's castle on Baranof Island.

BEAUTIFUL GHOST OF BARANOF LIGHT

In the castle on the cliff at Sitka, a lovely wraith appeared.

Baranof ordered the construction of a building where he could hold grand balls and entertain foreign dignitaries, but the edifice was never occupied by the governor himself. It served as the official residence of the chief managers of the Russian-American Company.

From the top of the castle, 100 feet above the sea, a light burned as a beacon to mariners entering Sitka harbor. In the cupola, four little square cups were housed. Into these, seal or whale oil was poured and wicks burned in grooves rising from them.

The castle lighthouse was a chore for its keepers, who labored many hours carrying the heavy oil containers up the stairs to the lantern; and the brass and copper reflectors had to be polished daily.

Worst of all, it had a ghost. Legend claims that the tower was haunted by a beautiful princess whose untimely death was a result of Baranof's little dictatorship.

The truth of her fate is buried in conflicting tales, but the most accepted one claims her wraith returned at six-month intervals to haunt the northwest chamber of the castle where either she had been murdered or had destroyed herself.

Baranoff, knowing of the flaming love between the princess and one of his staff, is said to have banished the officer to Siberia and told her he had been lost at sea. By tradition, this lovely lady, daughter of a former governor, was forced to marry against her will. She mysteriously vanished from the wedding festival and later was found dead in her chamber.

WHEN THE UNITED STATES purchased Alaska from the Russians in 1867, it was labelled by many as a folly—a vast sub-continent that could never be tamed. The stretch of ocean between Siberia and the Russian capital at Sitka had seen the doom of countless Russian trading vessels. The Aleutian fangs, for the greater part of the year enshrouded by fog, and the hurricane-whipped seas, claimed a staggering toll, but the tragedy lay in the fact that many lives might have been spared had any aids to navigation been employed.

Instead, not a single light or signal guided those Russian navigators, with the exception of that small whale oil lantern placed in the cupola atop Baranof Castle at Sitka.

That feeble little beacon, established in 1837, was the only light to shine over the far northern waters until near the turn of the century. With a range and visibility of only a few miles in the clearest atmospheric conditions, it is little wonder that many ships that set out from Siberia were never heard of again.

The wealthy Russian-American Company suffered severe losses in ships and men, and yet did little to protect its great armada. Even when survivors reached shore, there were no living souls for hundreds of miles in any direction and death from exposure or starvation resulted.

For nearly 20 years after Alaska became United States territory, the government failed to lift a hand in safeguarding its waters. For a short time after the purchase, an American soldier was assigned to trim and replenish the old Russian beacon atop Baranof Castle at a wage of 40 cents a day, but after a few months the army garrison was withdrawn and the light abandoned.

The famous old castle was destroyed by fire in 1894. With it went the cupola that housed the light, and the apparition that haunted its keepers.

FINALLY, in 1884, sufficient funds were provided for 15 iron buoys, all of which were placed on the inside route through southeastern Alaska.

LISTEN CAREFULLY:

Who Can Tell a Canadian?

CAN A PERSON born and raised in English-speaking Canada always, or almost always, be identified as a Canadian by his way of speaking? Is there such a thing as a distinctive Canadian accent?

Or is the way in which most of us speak merely a variety of what is called "General American"? ("General American" is the prevalent mode of speech in New York state west of the Hudson, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the states of the Middle West and the West. The other major American dialects are the "Eastern"—or "New England"—and the "southern".)

Dr. Mario Pei, an eminent language scholar of Columbia University, says "the English of Canada sounds far more like an American than a British dialect." He suggests that Canadian speech is merely a variety of "General American," differing from it only in a few "Britishisms" in usage and pronunciation. And there can be no doubt that Canadian speech is much more closely related to "General American" than it is to the "Standard English" of England (the kind we generally hear on transcribed BBC chats).

Thanks to radio and television our living rooms can become laboratories for the study of Canadian and American speech differences. "General American" is heard almost everywhere in our nation, and this causes some students of speech to claim that within a few years all distinctiveness will have been ironed out of Canadian speech and that it will be utterly indistinguishable from "General American." (My son and the small boys he plays with seem to be acquiring alien overlays of accent which come, I suspect, chiefly from Roy Rogers and the Lone Ranger. Perhaps they will not outgrow them).

But, despite the prevalence and pressure of "General American," there does seem to be at the present time a distinctive Canadian accent which perhaps can be referred to as "General Canadian." It is not easy to refute the contention that this is merely a variant "General Canadian." It is not obviously closely related to it. But, on the other hand, a reasonable case can be made that there is at present a distinctive Canadian accent, a common basic mode of speech which underlies almost all of the regional distinctions of accent in English-speaking Canada.

Listen to Mr. Diefenbaker, to Mr. Pearson, to Larry Henderson, and Blair Fraser and Foster Hewitt, to Wayne and Shuster, to Giselle and to Juliette. It is obvious that these people are not English. But it is not so obvious that they are not American—and you have to listen very carefully to detect the speech qualities which assure you that they are Canadian.

What, then, are the distinctive marks of "General Canadian" speech? In what fundamental ways does it differ from "General American"? What should you listen for when you try to distinguish between Canadian and American speech?

I suggest that our mode of speech has three dominant characteristics which generally distinguish it from "General American." These are: 1. Our use of the r sound; 2. Our vowel-sounds; and 3. Our hard consonants.

* Canadians pronounce every r that can be pronounced. We don't roll them in the Scots fashion, but we do sound them all in a sort of trill. And we generally tend to become a little suspicious when a native Canadian fails to trill all his r's, especially the ones at the ends of words—we think that he is "Englishing" "Harvarding" his speech to show his superiority to us ordinary citizens.

Listen to what the American radio and TV and film people do with their r's. You may at first be inclined to say that they handle them exactly as we do. But listen carefully, Speakers of "General American" do trill most of their r's—but nearly all of them miss enough to show that they are not Canadian. Compare Lowell Thomas and Larry Henderson on this; compare Ed Murrow and Fred Davis.

* Canadian speech is characterized by sharp, definite vowel-sounds. "General American," of course, has much sharper vowels than "Southern American"—but it does tend to draw them out much more than "General Canadian."

Americans often say that they can always tell a Canadian by the way in which he pronounces the ou in words such as out and around and house. Our vowel-sound here is sharp and simple, perhaps even a little harsh, whereas Americans give it a sort of aout and arayound and hayous touch. And in the pronunciation of certain other vowels there are conspicuous differences. An obvious example is in the u of words such as produce and institution—"General American" commonly, though not always, says prodoce and instituition.

During Royal Visits we hear on newscasts from south of the border a good deal about the Doak of Edinburgh. Ed. Murrow, and many other able American speakers, give us doo-ring and exclusive and aha'ooer—not very many Canadians pronounce vowels in that way. It is instructive to compare Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Eisenhower on their use of vowels.

* Canadians are—generally more fussy and precise over their hard consonants than are Americans. Americans tend to pronounce certain t's almost as d's. Recently I heard a very fine American broadcaster say elghdy and identcal and congratulatons. In some words they underplay the t almost to the point of extinction; when Mr. Eisenhower uses a word such as costly the t is completely missed or just barely touched. And occasionally we are welcomed to programs on Saurdy night.

Some of you may now wish to tear this whole business apart and dismiss as just so much phonetic lint-picking that doesn't prove a thing. There are Americans who trill every r. There are Americans who keep all their vowels short and sharp and simple. There are Americans who are very careful with all their consonants. And there are Canadians, many of them, whose ways of speaking seem to refute this whole analysis. But take all these factors together, consider them as a pattern—and, if you listen carefully, 49 times out of 50 you will be able to distinguish the Canadian from the American. And, when in doubt, pay special attention to the vowel-sounds.

Even the Klondike gold rush of 1897-1898 failed to awaken the United States authorities to the urgent need of navigation aids. As ships poured into Alaska waters, a staggering toll of disaster and loss of life resulted.

Between 1875 and 1918, as an investigating committee found, 500 ships, representing a value of $20,000,000, had been wrecked in Alaskan waters. The grim total included the steamer Islander, flagship of the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company, which, on August 15, 1901, sank after hitting an iceberg off Douglas Island, near Juneau, with the loss of 65 lives, and the Canadian Pacific Railway steamer Princess Sophia, lost in 1918 with her entire complement of 343 souls. The same company's Princess Kathleen was wrecked on September 7, 1952, fortunately with no loss of life, near the spot where the Islander went down.

Alaska's first primary lighthouse was built in 1895 near the site of the old Russian beacon at Sitka. Now, lights dot the entire Alaskan coast, including the inside passageways.

CAPE SARICHEF lighthouse is the farthest west on the North American continent; 2,100 miles further west than San Francisco. Scotch Cap lighthouse stands 20 miles to the southeast. Both are on the western end of Unimak Island, marking respectively the north and south entrances to Unimak Pass, that treacherous passage way which all Canadian and American vessels use when passing in and out of the Bering Sea.

When ice closes around the Bering Sea in winter, the light goes out at Sarichef, the only major lighthouse in Alaska so affected; but Scotch Cap keeps on shining.

When the Russians first saw Unimak's five active volcanoes, and steam rising from its streams and lake, they called the island "The Root of Hell." White Shishaldin is 9,500 feet high, and erupts frequently to the accompaniment of earthquakes and seismic waves. During winter the surrounding seas turn to ice. Fog shrouds the island in summer. Sailors call Unimak the "Isle of Lost Ships," for countless vessels have been lost in that vicinity. The area is where most of the storms which sweep down over the Pacific originate.

THE FIRST United States lighthouse on the Pacific coast was established in 1854 on Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay. It wasn't suspected then that some day the keepers would be neighbors of that country's toughest convicts. The tower was octagonal-shaped and its 90,000-candlepower light could be seen for a distance of 21 miles.

The original hand-tooled fog bell was later replaced by a 1,500-pound affair tolled by machinery. But when the fog rolled in (as it can do at San Francisco) even the machinery was overworked and the keepers found themselves banging the clapper by hand for periods which often exceeded 24 hours. Even with a lightkeeper's devotion he was never sure his efforts were not in vain. In 1868, the barque Oliver Cutts was wrecked within a few hundred feet of where the Alcatraz fog bell was tolling. Today, Alcatraz fog signal gives out an ear-bursting blast which can be heard far beyond the Golden Gate.

On the California, Oregon, Washington and Alaska coasts there are now over 100 light stations, each with a permanent lightkeeper and one or more assistants. Unwatched lights, with both light and fog signal automatically operated by electricity from the shore, total about the same number. Lighted buoys and blinkers are numerous and adequate.

British Columbia has 46 permanently staffed light stations, and about the same number unwatched. Lighted buoys and blinkers are numerous and adequate.

Race Rocks and Fisgard were the first light-houses erected on the B.C. coast. Their lights shone out for the first time in December, 1860. Both were built by the Imperial Government with bricks and stone blocks brought out from England in sailing ships, around the Horn. Fisgard, at the entrance to Esquimalt harbor, is now an unwatched light.

Cape Flattery and New Dungeness light-houses, on the American side of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, were established in 1857.

All aids to navigation on the American coast are maintained by the United States Coast Guard. Those on the B.C. coast, by the department of transport, through its two agencies at Victoria and Prince Rupert.

MURIEL WILSON'S Thought for Food

THIS WEEK we are continuing on the family theme, not just because our home is still overflowing with family but because there has been quite a demand for family style recipes. Readers have asked for more recipes and suggestions which can be used by mothers with children to feed . . . recipes which are large economy size.

We will start with a casserole that has been a standby in our family for years. I don't think it has ever had a name but that is nothing against it. It is family size and it is economical. Most important, it is fine flavored. Some people have the idea that if the food is cheap it is tasteless and uninteresting. That is not so at all . . . some of the cheapest ingredients can be put together and cooked to produce a gourmet dish.

True, the less expensive foods usually take a little more time and thought in preparation.

Well then let's make this "Wilson Casserole." It should serve eight and the cost shouldn't be more than a dollar and a quarter.

Brown one pound ground beef or hamburg steak and a good sized onion (chopped) in two tablespoons of bacon fat. Get it nice and brown. Keep moving it with a fork while it is cooking. Turn into a casserole. Into the pan pour a large tin of tomatoes (20 ozs.). Let this come to a boil and use a wooden spoon to get all the brownings off the pan. Pour this into the casserole with the meat and onion. Add one cup rice (not instant). Season well. The basic seasoning is one teaspoon each of salt and accent, half a teaspoon chili powder and a little freshly ground pepper. You can add some herbs if you wish . . . oregano, bay leaf, basil, thyme or garlic. If you are not familiar with garlic remember that it is like a little man with a big voice. Use it sparingly. I bake this casserole with the lid on for about 45 minutes. Remove the lid, sprinkle with some sharp grated cheese and a few strips of bacon. These last add a little to the cost but gives a nice finishing touch. If you cut the bacon into bits with the scissors and sprinkle it over the top it goes farther than putting on whole strips. Run under the broiler until cheese is bubbly and bacon crisped.

RIGHT NOW seems to be a good place to say a few words in praise of accent . . . that white powder that comes in the red box. First, what is it? It is the pure crystals of monosodium glutamate.

For years the Japanese and Chinese used a powdered seaweed to season their bland foods. Early in the century Doctor Kikunae Ikeda of Tokyo University identified monosodium glutamate as the substance in seaweed that added zest to food. He perfected a process for extracting the crystals. The Japanese called their product aji-no-moto or "essence of taste." In this country it is called accent.

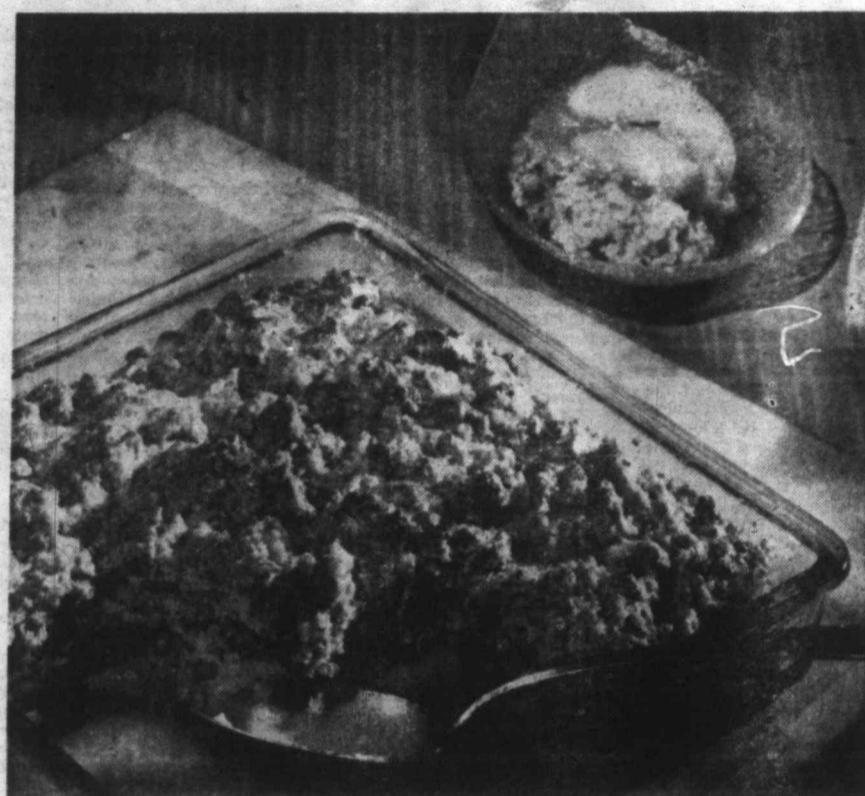

Good cooks bless the day it was put on the grocery shelves . . . there is nothing like it to accentuate the flavor of any savory. A third shaker containing these white crystals should have its place beside the salt and pepper in every kitchen. It is especially valuable in cooking the cheaper cuts of meat.

Not only meat but fish . . . fish will retain its flavor longer when accent is sprinkled over it before cooking or prior to freezing. It will preserve natural color and prolong life when freezing fish, meat or vegetables. Accent improves the taste of left-overs and prevents loss of flavor in the refrigerator. It holds the flavor of food you are trying to keep warm for tardy husband or children and keeps the food from having that unpleasant, overcooked taste. A pinch of these white crystals reduces the acid of tomatoes, the strongness of onion and cabbage and it lifts the flavor of spinach, carrots, peas and beans to a higher realm. There is no distinct flavor or smell to accent itself but it does have the most amazing properties of stepping up flavor.

If you would like a flavor test, do this . . . took two hamburg patties. Season them both in the usual way then add a good pinch of accent to just one of the patties. Cook, and taste the difference. It is one of the most important secrets of better cooking. I have taken the space to tell you about accent's strange magic because a number of people have asked me about it recently.

STEW is not only for large families. It is fine for twosomes too. The person who only cooks

TASTY ECONOMY

A heavy aluminum pot with a tight cover is what I now use.

The best cuts for a pot roast are round bone, point brisket, blade roast or short ribs. Most of these cuts are fairly fat. If you don't like fat you may have to search a bit to find a piece on the lean side. Mind you, if it's too lean you won't have the flavor.

First rub the meat with well-seasoned flour then sear all over in hot drippings. Add about a cup of water and an onion or two cut in eighths. Put a tight cover on the pot and cook over a very low heat, turning once or twice, until the meat is fork tender. The liquid should be practically nil by the time the meat is done but the bottom of the pot will be covered with lovely brown drippings. Leave the cover off, turn up the heat and keep turning the meat in the drippings till every bit is glazed and brown. Remove meat to hot platter and make the gravy. Add water or vegetable water to the pan drippings, boil and stir till all the brown bits are incorporated into the liquid. Thicken and taste for seasoning, adding accent and more salt if needed.

And now to finish with a little sweet talk . . . Desserts are important to most children, so here is one that will satisfy the sweet tooth yet is not expensive to make. I found it the other day while browsing through an old hand-written recipe book that I used when the children were at home. It always went by the name of "Apple Something or Other." It is a sort of pudding and I made it for dinner tonight. It was eaten to the last sweet mouthful so I decided to pass it on to you. It served six generously.

First grease a 9 x 9-inch pan and slice two medium-sized apples on the bottom. Now mix together one cup flour, one tablespoon sugar, two teaspoons baking powder, a dash of salt, one tablespoon salad oil or melted butter and half a cup of milk. Into this batter stir one cup chopped apple. Spread on top of sliced apples.

Over the batter pour a syrup using the following ingredients . . . One cup brown sugar, one tablespoon lemon juice, two tablespoons butter or margarine, half a teaspoon cinnamon and two cups boiling water. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven for about half an hour.

I served this with a scoop of ice cream on top but if you wish to keep the cost to a minimum it can be served plain with a couple of the apple slices placed on top of each serving.

CAPT. PETER MATHIESON

He was the Master Of the Moving Sea

By JOHN SHAW

HERE IS A VOLUME which breathes of the spicy East, the flowers of the south seas, the tar and smoke and tawdriness of the world's great seaports. It is a book of astonishing contrasts to any but one who has followed the sea.

But above all else, and clinging to every page of it, is the salt tang of the oceans.

Gladys M. O. Gowlland, author of Master of the Moving Sea, has done a tremendous job on a biographical pattern, but which is more than the story of one man. It is the story of a whole race of great seamen, and of many magnificent ships.

Capt. Peter John Riber Mathieson was Miss Gowlland's brother-in-law. It is he who tells the tale. Miss Gowlland was the instrument — who took notes of his narrative during many an evening session, and eventually gave the story continuity. She has done her work well.

The book is of particular interest to Vancouver Islander's since it tells much about the early commerce which gave the impetus to a new colony's economy and of the ships and men responsible.

It is significant, perhaps, that a man who had followed the sea for a lifetime and seen the loveliest lands, chose Vancouver Island over all, and induced his father to sell his Norwegian holdings, to make a new home at the entrance to Ladysmith harbor.

"I felt confident he would like to live there," said Capt. Mathieson. "He took my advice, sold his farm at Roed, which had been in the family 150 years, and moved . . . with my mother and three brothers."

Miss Gowlland calls her book "the epic of the ship's boy of the Norwegian wooden barque Norma in 1885, who, wandering the world in craft of sail and steam through peace and war, rose to command fourteen vessels under the flags of five nations, including the clipper Antiope, the lofty Carrabin, the mighty Moshulu . . ." That's what it is: The epic of a born-seaman.

It is a strangely moving story, in part, for it tells of the gentleness of hard-handed men in times of crisis, of their high courage and resolve. It tells, too, of their failings. But that makes it appealingly human.

Capt. Mathieson left the sea in 1944 and retired to Vancouver.

After all the dangers he had survived, the almost miraculous escapes he had had during his years at sea, he was to die as a result of a traffic accident in 1954.

Miss Gowlland lives in Vancouver, works with Canadian Pacific Airlines, but still finds time to write, as she has done for many years.

ADVICE TO WRITERS:

KEEP IT SIMPLE

THERE is a small shelf of treasured books, heavily thumbed, for anyone seriously concerned with English writing, whether as writer, reader, critic or student.

The titles will vary somewhat for each individual, but almost certain to be on any self-respecting shelf are such old reliables as H. W. Fowler's Modern English Usage.

Thanks to the nostalgic affection of author E. B. White, room will now have to be made on this special shelf for a new old reliable. It is The Elements of Style, by William Strunk, Jr. (Macmillan), as revised and edited by Mr. White.

This slender volume is a delightful blend of sound, practical advice, of commonsense, of wit and perceptive insights into the very heart of good writing. Its 71 pages are a rich lode that rewards repeated mining by any interested reader.

Professor Strunk taught English composition to Mr. White some 40 years ago when the author was a student at Cornell University. In love with the flawless rhythms of the English language, the professor was easily infuriated by unclear, slovenly or ungrammatical writing.

As a result he wrote a concise textbook containing concrete rules and apt, illuminating examples of good and bad writing which became known on campus as "the little book." It was a sort of secular Clear, uncluttered writing is more important than ever to us today so it is encouraging to report that Dr. Strunk's admirable collection of admonitions and examples has already won an enthusiastic new following.

END of an ERA

OLD WORLD CRUMBLLED

"IN 1914 THE WORLD, as it was known and accepted then, came to an end." This simple declaration sums up the raison d'être of an unusual book, titled "1914."

The year 1914 was for Europe a watershed between a century of more-or-less peace and the age of conflict which was to follow—an age from which we have, alas, not yet emerged.

James Cameron, a British writer, traverses that crucial year from its carefree beginning through its brilliant, though war-clouded summer to the dark first winter of world war. Although many readers can recall that year from their own memories, to younger readers it will probably read like a fin de siècle chronicle from a distant past.

For Americans, of course, this is not strictly true, since the U.S. entry into that war dates from 1917. Yet the outbreak of war on Aug. 4, 1914, cast a pall on this side of the Atlantic as well. Here, too, life was never to be the same again. Mr. Cameron confines his narrative largely to England, with some excursions to the Continent, for it was there that the opening act in the tragedy was played out. By way of compensation he casts his net far and wide, taking in not only the war itself, but the arts and sciences, the sports and entertainments, the daily life of the people. It is an animated, beautifully balanced picture of the year.

Bernard Shaw, as usual, saw the issue clearly. "Let us take our pugnacity to the field and leave our hypocrisy at home: this war is a balance-of-power war and nothing else."

The deeper we get into our age of conflict, the more glowing that Indian Summer of 1914 looks in retrospect. The virtue of this book is that it recreates that halcyon time so enviably.—W.B.

"Why do I always have to be the Indian?"

THE POLICE CHIEF ASKED HIMSELF:

HOW COULD A DEAD MAN

TO THE BEST of my knowledge, Betty Coward and "Chubby" Clinger only saw each other once; and that for a fleeting moment as they passed in a hallway of the Clinton courthouse. Somehow it seems natural that fate, back in the year 1915, should have directed their paths together, for they had much in common.

Both, for one thing, were Americans, and both had left California in 1914 to homestead in B.C.'s hinterland. Although they settled 120 miles apart there was still a bond between them; both were capable of murder, and each evolved a special technique for outwitting the law. Each lost out.

It was in the early spring of 1915, while the vast plateau of the Cariboo rangeland still lay under a mantle of snow, that little "Chubby" Clinger rode into the cowtown of Clinton one February morning. As his nickname indicated, "Chubby" was one of those comfortably built little characters who, as he lolled in the saddle of his ambling Cayuse heading for a local "feed and board" stable, exchanged a careless greeting now and again with some of the Monday afternoon idlers. For "Chubby" (whose real name was Albert Lester Clinger) had managed to get fairly well known in his year in the district.

He had come up from California the previous year, with a partner, tall, lean and lanky Thomas Burton "Tom" Smith. They were not only dissimilar physically, but Smith was taciturn and short of speech, while Chubby was "half-fellow-well-met." The pair had looked the country over and finally took up a pre-emption at Springhouse Prairie near Dog Creek, about 45 miles northwest of Clinton. It was good grazing country and with some stock they might have a proposition, especially with the war on in Europe and rising beef prices.

Smith didn't often come to Clinton, so it was Clinger who usually rode into town to buy the supplies. This particular afternoon, after he had seen to his horse, Chubby was slanting across the dirt road to the Clinton Hotel for a drink when on the way he bumped into the 35-year-old district chief of the Provincial Police, Frank E. Aiken.

"Frank, you're just the man I want to see," was Chubby's more than pleased greeting. "Can we go over to your office and have a talk."

A few minutes later in the little wooden police office, Chubby was unburdening himself of a story. According to what he had to say, the Clinger-Smith partnership had dissolved with startling suddenness. It happened one night when he and Smith were camped on the Dog Creek trail on the way out from Springhouse to Ashcroft to buy some equipment. When Clinger rubbed the sleep out of his eyes in the morning he was surprised to find that both Smith and his horse had gone — gone with $200 from Chubby's pocket!

"Can you imagine that dirty so-and-so," snorted Chubby, trying to roll a Bull Durham cigarette in his nervous excitement, "Jack rolling his partner. I wouldn't have thought it possible. No sir, I wouldn't have thought it possible."

"Did you try to follow him?" asked Aiken.

"Yeh, I checked his tracks," said Chubby, "followed them for a couple of miles, then lost them. It was down in some cattle-beaten hay meadow and I couldn't pick 'em up again."

"However, it don't matter," he went on philosophically. "I don't care if I never see him again."

There was a pause for a second as he sucked his cigarette, then he added, "I guess nobody else around here will."

"How's that?" asked Aiken.

"Well, I've had an idea for some time he was going to pull out and leave me. He said now and again in the last few months that he might go to Rumania."

"Rumania?" echoed the puzzled police chief.

Provincial Const. Jack Bourne, centre, played a leading role in the hunt for the killer near Clinton. At right is "Shorty" Ashton, who lived for years at Sooke after his retirement.

"He's got a boy there, working for the Standard Oil Company," explained the pre-emptor, "and he said once or twice he'd like to go to Europe and join him."

The interview ended with Aiken taking a signed statement from Chubby.

WHEN CLINGER LEFT. Aiken sat deep in thought for a few minutes, then suddenly he got up and cranked the handle of the wall phone. He was calling 32-year-old Const. Jack Bourne at 150 Mile House, the next police post north of Clinton on the Cariboo road, about 50 miles away.

When Aiken heard Bourne's voice, he merely asked him to report at Clinton as soon as he could.

When Bourne cantered in to Clinton late the next evening, Aiken briefed him on Chubby Clinger's story, then finally remarked:

"There's something fishy about that yarn."

"For one thing," he went on, "he didn't seem particularly interested in getting his money back. That 'good riddance to bad rubbish' line doesn't sound right."

"You think he's trying to put something over on Smith and using the police?" asked Bourne.

"I don't know what to think," said Aiken. "But I know if it had been anyone else they'd have been madder'n mischief . . . yelling for the police to get their money back."

He lit his pipe, and then added, "and this story about Smith heading for Rumania. With the war on, how would he ever get to Rumania. If he was leaving the country with the money he stole, he wouldn't get past Ashcroft without being seen."

Aiken's reasoning, of course, was based on the knowledge that no one goes unnoticed where population is scarce. In the cattle country, everything about a passing stranger is taken in, from the age of his horse to the color of his shirt. On the coast the same thing applies; fishermen can often tell you who's coming before the boat is in sight. The rhythm of a motor tells them everything.

"Well, anyway," said Aiken, as he finally stood up and reached for his hat, "I figure that you and I better get on the trail of Mr. Smith and try to get Chubby's money back."

NEXT DAY, with a packhorse trailing them, the chief and his assistant wended their way over the snow-covered but still unmistakable rangeland trails until finally they arrived at Springhouse Prairie where they found the year-old Smith-Clinger homestead deserted.

Aiken and Bourne, two trailwise outdoorsmen were well up on the technique of reading the signs around the abandoned habitations. Aiken, as a matter of fact, in his day was considered one of the best all-round bushmen the Cariboo had known. He had been by turn, trapper and guide and now he was a policeman; years later when he left the police, he became a game warden. This then was the man who glanced around the abandoned home cabin, then took a turn around the outside. Nothing escaped his eye. Although the little log building was shrouded in an atmosphere of lonely isolation, here and there Aiken noted the small details that told him how the two men had lived.

Next the policemen climbed into the saddle and took a swing around the homestead looking for tracks and finally they picked up signs of two riders; two horsemen, who, by the history of the weather, had ridden off about a week ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Napoleon Pigeon were the nearest neighbors, 25 miles away, and the tracks seemed to lead in their direction.

For miles the two officers jogged along, following the eight telltale hoofprints until finally, as it drew dusk, they reined in where the tracks seemed to end. Dismounting, they examined the ground and finally in a brush-covered draw they found something.

The body of a man lay face down on the ground.

Turning him over they saw it was Tom Smith. He was frozen stiff and had been dead about a week. Cause of his death was readily apparent; a neat bullet hole in the back of his head. Which meant only one thing . . . murder.

Aiken rummaged through the dead man's pockets but found nothing of value.

Next morning at daylight he and Bourne toothcombed the area for signs of a weapon, but found nothing.

THERE WERE no signs of a struggle, and no sign of the murdered man's horse. Aiken concluded it had probably wandered off in search of feed, if it hadn't been lead away by the murderer. He also deduced that Smith had been shot as he knelt by his fire, shot from behind without warning. The bullet had penetrated clear through the unfortunate man's skull from back to front and was lost somewhere in the undergrowth. From the accuracy of the shooting and the bullet's obvious velocity it was fired from a rifle.

Lashing Smith's body on their packhorse the two policemen headed back for Clinton. They had discovered the body on Feb. 11 and arrived back in Clinton two days later. Chubby Clinger was still around the settlement grumbling about his partner's deceit and astonished now to learn that Smith had been found dead.

"Must have been some Indian who caught up with him," was his gloomy surmise.

On Sunday, Feb. 14, there was an autopsy on the murdered Smith and the next day (a week after Chubby Slinger had ridden in to Clinton to report his partner's disappearance), the coroner, Dr. Sanson, held an inquest. The jury heard the police and medical evidence, as well as Chubby's tale of his partner's perfidy. They came to the conclusion that Smith had been murdered by his partner . . . Chubby Clinger.

Later that day, as the remains of homesteader Smith were being buried, a very chastened and sober Chubby Clinger was peering through

AD MAN CASH A CHEQUE?

This is the old Clinton courthouse where Chubby Clinger was tried and convicted. It was burned down some years later by a cattle rustler awaiting trial there. He deliberately set the place afire to destroy the evidence—a branded hide—risking his life in the process.

the strap iron bars of a police cage in the Clinton lockup, while across the hall in his office Aiken tried methodically to figure out some of the blanks in the case. True the dead man had no money in his pockets, while Chubby had close to a hundred dollars on him when he was arrested. But that didn't prove it was Smith's money.

It was on the off-chance that some cow-puncher, rancher or Indian had seen the pair together near the time of Smith's death, that Aiken took it into his head the next day to range again around in the vicinity of Dog Creek, and finally his travels took him to Pigeon's ranch.

It was here he got a bit of information that quickened his thinking.

RANCHER PIGEON mentioned during lunch that he'd recently received a note from Smith, a note in which the dead man said he was leaving the country, possibly going to Europe. As he had to leave in somewhat of a hurry, Smith had said, he was sorry there was no time for a personal goodbye.

"Funny he should write to me like that," said Pigeon; "because we never did see much of one another."

Aiken asked to see the letter, studied it, then with a faraway look in his eyes folded it up and tucked it in his notebook.

Still worried about the question of money, as a possible motive for the crime, Aiken wondered as he rode back to Clinton, whether Smith had a bank account, and if so, where. There was only one method of finding out so he again headed his horse in the direction of the deserted cabin on Springhouse Prairie. There he searched around its interior until he found what he wanted; some of Smith's returned cheques from the Bank of British North America in Ashcroft. These, too, he tucked in his pocket book.

body that medical testimony had said had been lying there for a week!

Perhaps it was then that Frank Aiken learned the truth of the age-old axiom "the pen is mightier than the sword." For if he hadn't found a weapon to link Chubby Clinger with the death of his partner, then at least he'd found something just as important; strong evidence that Clinger anticipated the killing of his partner (when he wrote the letter to Pigeon) and proof that he profited by the killing by an act of forgery.

As Aiken figured it out, Clinger could have continued drawing on Smith's Account by mail-borne forged cheques so long as his partner's body lay undiscovered. The police had spoiled the plan by finding the corpse too soon.

There was a brief preliminary hearing where Clinger was committed for trial, and although he was scheduled to appear at the Clinton Assize in May, just around that time Const. Bourne was in hospital. Apparently he'd been badly cut by flying glass when he retrieved a prisoner who made a leap for liberty through the window of a PGE train near Squamish. Due to Bourne's absence the case was set over to the Fall assize.

It was in September that Mr. Justice Denis Murphy mounted the bench in the Clinton Assize court, to note that N. F. Baird was Crown prosecutor and J. E. Bird was present to defend Clinger.

THE WITNESSES were heard, and finally little Chubby Clinger took the witness stand in his own defence to tell again the story of how he's been robbed by Smith as he lay by a Cariboo campfire. This time however he changed the sequel. He said he trailed Smith for miles and finally caught up with him. He was going to halt his thieving partner at rifle point, but he suddenly stumbled on a snow-covered log and the gun went off accidentally, killing Smith.

"I got my money back," said Clinger, "but I was scared to death. So scared," he went on, "that I didn't dare tell the real story to the police. That's why I told Chief Aiken that I lost Smith's tracks in the snow."

Against Clinger's story the jury had to weigh evidence that Smith was shot in the back of the head; that Clinger later spread the word that Smith had gone to Europe. And finally there was the forged cheque.

In his summing up Judge Murphy pointed out that Clinger had stated that he was dazed and stupefied after the shooting, a point he contradicted by the deliberate manner in which he said he got the money off the corpse.

The 12 cattle country jurymen, wise to range-lab habits and ways, were also wise to human frailty and cupidity. They were out 45 minutes and returned with a verdict of "guilty."

The pudgy little man from California, his face now drawn and gray, stood up long enough to hear Judge Murphy tell him that he had but 90 days to live. He would be hanged, said the law, at the Kamloops jail on Dec. 23, 1915.

Clinger's mind was numb as he turned at the touch of a policeman's hand on his arm and shuffled off back to his cell. On the way down the corridor he had to stand aside momentarily as another police officer and a matron escorted a small, dark-haired, 40-year-old woman toward the courtroom. A woman whose dark eyes reflected a strange mixture of fear and defiance as they met those of the man who had but three months to live.

The woman was Betty Coward who, as I said in the beginning, had a story strangely parallel to that of the stocky little pre-emptor; and although Chubby didn't know it at the time he'd had a momentary glimpse of the first woman sentenced to death by hanging in British Columbia.

We'll have her story in next week's "Islander."

Merna Jenkins to Sing for Fellow Citizens

By BERT BINNY

MERNA JENKINS

A LITTLE THING which can be done with a great deal of delight is to read "Dream Days" by that quite inimitable author who bequeathed us "Toad of Toad Hill" and "The Reluctant Dragon," Kenneth Graham.

Between the covers of "Dream Days" there is an engaging little anecdote, "Dies Irae," relative to the thoughts of a young boy against whom the whole world, for the time being anyway, appears to have turned. Everything goes wrong; he is the victim of twisted circumstances and also, to him, of severe injuries.

So, like a smaller edition of Walter Mitty, he indulges in magnificent day dreams and, in one particular one wherein he will run away from home in sheer disgust and return in the future as the commanding general of a victorious, invading army. Then in a surge of magnanimity, he will forgive and spare from the most horrible demise teachers, parents and all the others who, in his youth, failed utterly to understand him and treated him so very unjustly.

I suppose there must be some subtle compliment to the parents, teachers and other wrongdoers in this tale implicit in the suggestion that it would require an army to convince them of their error. But to such excesses are dreamers of retribution and the determination to "show 'em" often driven.

However, there are others on the opposite side of the ledger; those who go away, prosper in their chosen field and return—not to fill their early mentors with shame and remorse—but to thank them for what they have done. This probably happens far more frequently in real life but it doesn't have the literary impact possessed by the grand revenge motive.

So we don't often read about it.

Returning to Victoria next Thursday and appearing in recital on Friday is dramatic soprano, Merna Jenkins. Merna is a native Victorian; born here, educated at Sir James Douglas and Victoria High Schools and with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Jenkins, living here at 2634 Dunlevy Street.

Now I am sure that Merna is not coming home—like Mr. Graham's little boy—mounted on a huge, coal-black charger and with an army behind her. Nor will her head be full of thoughts of conquest or revenge.

"She is just thrilled to be coming!" says Mrs. Jenkins.

And this is the thrill of renewing old acquaintances, sharing her gift with those

and, by very demonstration, of showing them fruits of their co-operation and assistance.

It was the late W. H. Wilson, then principal of Sir James Douglas School, who early noted the great promise in Merna's voice. During the war, Mrs. Wilson, now a city alderman, organized a girls' choir, called the "Philomels," who did a vast amount of entertaining for and on behalf of the services.

Merna was a "Philomel" and Mrs. Wilson also noted her promising voice and encouraged her in its development.

She started serious study with Roberto Wood in 1953. For the next four years she competed regularly in the Greater Victoria Music Festival, first as a grade "B" voice and then, in 1955 and 1956, in grade "A" classes.

In both these latter years Merna was awarded the J. F. K. English scholarship. In 1955 she won the open folk song class with a mark of 84, the contralto solo class with 169/200 and the operatic class. Her mark of 86 placed her second in the oratorio contest.

The following year she was finalist in competition for the B.C. Electric Rose Bowl. She won the J. Ingram Smith award for her operatic aria, "Re Dell'abissio affrettati" from Verdi's "The Masked Ball." She won the folk song class with the E. Boatner arrangement of "Oh, What a Beautiful City." And she was a finalist in the oratorio class.

Then, in the fall of 1956, she auditioned and was accepted for the artists' course at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto. Since then, each succeeding year, she has received honors and a further, larger scholarship until her successful graduation, again with honors, this spring. In addition, Merna has been awarded two successive scholarships to the Banff School of Fine Arts.

She is soloist at Bedford Park United Church in Toronto and has sung over CBC

Radio and TV in Toronto and Victoria. At Banff she sang "Donna Anna" in Mozart's "Don Giovanni" as well as the solo soprano in Mozart's First Mass.

But on Friday she will be back in Victoria to sing to those of her friends who care to hear; maybe to fellow "Philomels" of another year and to fellow students of the J. Roberto Wood Studios.

She appears on the Registered Music Teachers' Association "Young Artists" series; Victoria being just one stop in a cross-Canada tour.

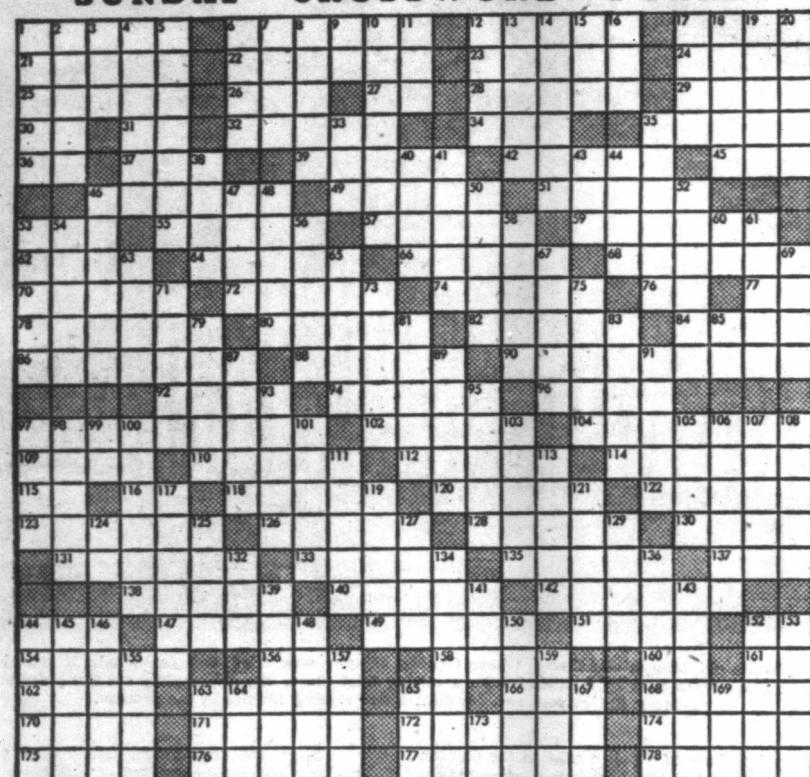

She is the first Victoria singer to be selected for this honor since the series was started. Victoria has supplied two pianists in the past, Miss Joan Molloy, now Mrs. J. Foot of Calgary, and Miss Pat Shakespeare, now Mrs. Milton Creasy of 1491 Myrtle Street. But Merna is the first Victoria vocalist.

With her is pianist Elaine Keillor of Hamilton who has an amazing record of successes. Together they will make a wonderful team.

Their performance is at the War Amps Hall, 1016 Oak Bay Avenue, on Friday, Oct. 23, at 8:30 p.m. It is a more than usually compelling invitation to musical Victoria.

Peninsula Players Plan Ahead

By BERT BINNY

Coming Attractions Hint Fresh Laurels

THE COMMITTEE was deliberating upstairs. A large representation from the membership was setting up a rehearsal in the basement.

The place was the home of Larry Scardifield, president for 1959-60 of the Peninsula Players.

Suspended, like Mahomet's coffin, midway between the two conclaves and, therefore, half way up (or down) the basement

The current production which was receiving all the attention in the basement actually opens on the stage at Sidney Elementary School on Friday of this week. Other more distant projects which were being weighed in the balance upstairs were a Christmas play and a presentation for the spring.

The Peninsula Players, as friendly and enthusiastic a group of thespians as any, started life in 1953 with 11 members and $22. Of all 11 charter members one, John Gray, has died. The rest, all 10 of them, are still active with the organization. It is understood, also, that the 22 charter dollars are still around and, indeed, that they have attracted a few of their friends.

The very first play was called "High Tension" and the first cast, directed by Mrs. Ailsa Rothery, included Eve and John Gray, Mrs. L. Scardifield, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Vickerman and Mrs. Joan Henriksen.

The following year the Peninsula Players entered the provincial drama festival and signalized their arrival in the lists of public competition by immediately being selected for the honor performance and proceeding to the provincial finals at Nanaimo.

The successful play was T. B. Morris' "The Tail of Fire" and the director was again Mrs. Rothery. There were seven players; Joan Henriksen, Fenella Paterson, Jane Leigh, Kay Vickerman, Jim Elliott, Larry Scardifield and Joe Lunn. The stage manager was David Smart.

The adjudicator, Miss Margaret Barney of Portland, described "The Tail of Fire" as "most delightful and refreshing."

"The Peninsula Players," she added, "should be watched in the future!"

In 1955 the Sidney group entered an original play, "Old Hands," by W. S. Harrison, with a cast of Jennifer Williams, Also Rothery, Ken Smith and Frank Watts. The director was Neil Horth and the stage manager was Joan Henriksen.

Of this play it was noted at the time that "the capacity of the players was not given any opportunity in this particular play." The script was altogether too wordy.

But whatever its eventual steps, one could tune in on the distinctive sounds produced by both. From above came the distinctively low and serious murmur of voices always associated with weighty decisions and solemn discussions on plans and policies. From below came laughter, shouts, squeals and the noise of properties being placed and misplaced.

The Peninsula Players of Sidney and district were having a full evening.

IN THIS GROUP of Peninsula Players, Larry Scardifield, Eve Gray and Frank Watts, top, Joan Henriksen and Margaret Dixon, three are charter members. Eve Gray, Joan Henriksen and Larry Scardifield have been enthusiastic members from the beginning. (Bill Boucher Photo.)

Leaf, Margaret Dixon and Otto Plaschko. In charge of publicity is "Ginger" Norman.

They are making all the arrangements for presentation of a Christmas play, probably "Wendigo" or "The Legend of Forbidden Plateau," by Avis Walton of Victoria. Two previous Christmas productions have been "The Pied Piper," with Mary Leaf in the name part in 1957, and "Hansel and Gretel" in 1955.

Also being considered are a spring play, a provincial festival entry and the Dominion Drama Festival. The B.C. Regional competition of the DDF is scheduled for Victoria in March and the finals for Vancouver in May.

Three-act plays, performed either at North Saanich, Mount Newton or Sidney Elementary Schools, have been such as "Laburnum Grove," "Blithe Spirit," "Miranda," "Mr. Pim Passes By," "The Chiltern Hundreds" and "High Ground."

Nell Horth and Ailsa Rothery accomplish most of the directing, though productions have also been done by Leslie Allen and Vera Trueman of Victoria as well as John Gray and Jane Leigh of Sidney.

Community drama performs a number of significant services to society generally; more, perhaps, than are immediately apparent. It provides entertainment, a good deal of it in a rather specialized form not otherwise obtainable. This is the form in which neighbors see neighbors performing on the stage rather than some distant, Olympe personally known only to them through stentorian press agents. Such local performances unfortunately play havoc with aesthetic distance, a strong ally to all actors and actresses but replace it with a peculiar quality of understanding.

Very often, too, community drama assists other worthy community projects in the financial sense. Then again it offers plays which might otherwise never be seen and which provide a whole lot of enjoyment.

But community drama is also vastly important in providing the springboard from which actors and actresses dive off into the glittering world of professional entertainment. Histrionic talent—indeed, any artistic talent—respects no boundaries, favors no regions and flourishes under no set pattern. Our next great star may appear

Trutch Letters Disclose

By B. A. McKELVIE

LOST B.C. HISTORY

THANKS to the generosity of Mrs. Charlotte Morgan Kelly and her son, Flt.-Lieut. Michael Kelly, of Ottershaw, England, British Columbia is richer in knowledge of its period of colonial history than formerly.

Mrs. Kelly is a daughter of John Trutch and niece of Joseph Trutch, better known as "Sir Joseph," the first provincial lieutenant-governor. She is also niece of Sir Anthony Musgrave, the

When the Royal Engineers withdrew from British Columbia in October, 1863, Joseph Trutch was asked to accept appointment as chief commissioner of works. He did so, at a great sacrifice; for the Trutch brothers had constructed the greater part of the Cariboo Road between Yale and Lytton, and as a private venture had built the fine suspension bridge near Spuzzum. It proved to be a profitable investment, paying between $10,000 and $20,000 annually. In order to accept the post of commissioner, the interest in the bridge, especially on the part of Joe Trutch, had to be sacrificed. He did not want to do it, but finally accepted as a public duty. Governor Seymour was anxious to obtain his services, but felt that a man occupying the office of commissioner of works should not have a monetary interest in any public road. It was especially hard upon John Trutch to have to withdraw from a work of such promise, but Seymour felt that it would not be proper for the brother of a commissioner to have such an investment.

The brothers were devoted to each other. They were pioneers of the northwest, arriving long before the gold rush. Joseph was a handsome, big man, with a large black beard; John was shorter by several inches, but was of powerful build. He wore a beard of a coppery tint, while his large, steel grey eyes were a feature of his finely chiselled countenance.

Joseph, who was engaged in civil engineering with a railway in England, was attracted by the discovery of gold in California. He arrived at San Francisco in 1850.

Not long after he established himself on the Pacific Coast his young brother John arrived. After working for a time in California, they moved to the Columbia River. It was in the mid-fifties that Joseph received an offer to design a canal in Illinois, and went there. John stayed in the West and became an assistant surveyor-general for the territory of Washington. He surveyed much of the land about Olympia.

When the gold rush started to British Columbia, Joe, who by this time had married a charming young lady in Illinois, Miss Julia Hyde, hastened to London. There he met Lieut.-Col. R. C. Moody RE, who had been ordered to take a contingent of specially selected men to the colony that was being formed. He and Trutch became very friendly.

and he told the young engineer that if he would proceed to the West Coast at his own expense, he would provide him with any employment in the engineering line that he could allocate for civilian professionals.

Joseph at once wrote to his brother, advising him to leave Olympia and cross to Victoria, where possibly Vancouver's Island's Surveyor-General J. D. Pemberton might find employment for him. He did so, and did some government surveying until Joseph's arrival.

The brothers were both busily engaged, on the mainland and Island. They took over some of the works that the Royal Engineers started.

Thus, in 1862 they were widening the pack trail from Harrison Lake to Lillooet for a wagon road, when they were called to the Fraser Canyon to try to find a route for a traffic road through that most difficult stretch of mountain terrain.

One letter in the Trutch collection presented to the university by Mrs. Kelly, gives a glimpse of the bustle and excitement surrounding the building of the first roads. It is a note from Joe, written aboard the steamer Colonel Moody, May 22, 1862:

"My dear brother—

"Yours dated the 18th handed to me in New Westminster just before coming on board. I had no word from you for some time, but was informed by Ballou that he had forwarded two letters from you to me at Yale, supposing me to be up there. Through his remissness entirely is it that you did not get the provisions I shipped from Victoria. They were entrusted to him to forward from New Westminster and he entirely neglected the business, so that when I came up to N.W. last Saturday I was astonished to learn from Wylde that the goods were still there in bond. (Goods imported from Victoria had to pay B.C. duty). I at first ordered them to be shipped to you and wrote you to that effect, but afterwards on reflection that they could not reach you until the work was all done, I countermanded the order and had them all shipped to Yale, thus leaving you to look after yourself.

"I have been delayed since Saturday at N.W. waiting for a chance to take on the mules. The boats have been all crowded with animals and freight and the whole steamboating arrangements are out of order as Irving is about selling out his interest in the steamboat company to the Wrights. However, I am now on the way to Yale with 17 mules and three horses, tools for some 70 men, and provisions for the same for a month. Hick is with me and some 12 or 15 Cornish miners, also 10 or 12 other men.

"I have completed all my arrangements for the work with the L & W officer (land and works officer)—as also with Alfred Fellows (Yates Street), for tools and Henderson & Burnaby for provisions and other supplies. I depend fully on Jennings to join me as soon as possible with all the good men he can bring. He promised me the summer work and I agreed to allow him $125 per month, but must have him at any rate. Kearley is gone on ahead with part of the freight, the rest is with me."

Having given a fairly concise but illuminating picture of the start of the building of the Cariboo Road, Joe Trutch turns to the work that the brothers were finishing on the Harrison-Lillooet route:

"Colonel Moody assured me he will positively leave N.W. tomorrow (Friday) and go direct to your camp. He will then go on to Pavilion, and be on the Second Portage again in about six or seven days on his way down to N.W. He will then remain at N.W. about five or six days and then up to Yale where—or rather at my camp—he proposes to spend a week with me in selecting and deciding definitely with me the line of road through the canyon. My intention is to lay out the first (say three miles), to get it agreed upon by Grant (who is so instructed), get Hick fairly at work then go back to Victoria for more tools, provisions, etc., then back again so as to be in camp when the colonel is up."

"From what you say, I suppose you may be down next week, as soon as you have seen Col. Moody. He, the Colonel, has promised to take money up with him so that last of the colonial governors.

As her contribution to last year's centennial celebration she deposited with the University of B.C. a valuable collection of documents, mainly comprising correspondence between the Trutch brothers. As the foremost engineers of the colony they constructed many of the roads, built bridges and opened up the land with surveys.

SIR JOSEPH TRUTCH
... his letters for his wife

you may get from him whatever you need. He said he would positively leave on the 23rd from N.W., but I think it quite likely that you may not see him until the 27th, evening; but you may depend on his going up by that time with the money, or some one to be sent as his agent.

"Now, with regard to tools, tents, etc., of course, they will be all wanted in the canyon. The only question is can they be got from Victoria cheaper? That depends entirely on what you can sell them for. Steel is worth, at Victoria, 25 cents; drilling hammers, per lb., 25 cents if faced, 65 cents if solid; shovels $14 per dozen; picks, with handles, $10; axes $20; mattocks, $30; powder 20 cents per lb.; crowbars, 18 cents. To all these add 10 per cent duty and you get what they are."

"I have a bell mare and two riding horses with the train. A very decent man to take care of the train and a Spaniard to help him."

Following the union of British Columbia and Vancouver's Island Joe Trutch became a man of great influence in the colony, and Governor Seymour relied upon his skill and judgment in matters that had nothing to do with public works. Thus, when in 1869 the governor was instructed from London to take prompt measures to end an Indian war that had been raging for more than a year between the Tsimsheans at the mouth of the Skeena River and the Nishgas of the Naas River, he selected Trutch to accompany him.

The effort was too much for the governor, who rose from a sick bed to go on the mission, and he died aboard HMS Sparrowhawk in which he made the trip, while at Bella Coola. The effort had been successful, for this last endeavor of Seymour's was crowned with the establishment of a lasting peace between two powerful tribes. It was his most successful undertaking. Joseph Trutch brought the body back to Victoria, and upon his shoulders fell the heaviest load of responsibility of government until the arrival of the new governor, Sir Anthony Musgrave.

Musgrave came charged by the British government with the task of getting British Columbia to agree to enter the Canadian confederation, and complete consolidation of British territories in North America. After much debate and considerable acrimony, draft terms were agreed upon by Musgrave and the legislative assembly.

Sir Joseph Trutch was named by the governor to head the delegation to Ottawa to confer with the Canadian government. The other delegates were Dr. J. S. Helmcken and Dr. R. W. W. Carrall. With them travelled H. E. Seelye, special correspondent of The Victoria Colonist.

Very little information concerning the long discussions that went on with Sir John A. Macdonald and his ministers was known until a few years ago when minutes of the meeting kept by Dr. Helmcken were discovered when Mrs. Wm. Higgins, the youngest daughter of the old doctor, died and the family home on Elliot Street was transferred to the government in trust. This was the only record kept by the delegation. But to this is added a fragment of a letter written by Joseph Trutch from Ottawa to his wife in Victoria. It corroborates the faded notes in the crabbed handwriting of the doctor and gives one or two additional flashes of historic color that will be greatly appreciated by students of British Columbia's association with the Dominion.

Here is the page and a half of the letter that had come to the University of B.C. from Mrs. Morgan Kelly. Evidently the first page, that is missing, contained a description of the journey from Victoria to Ottawa, for the balance of the letter details the arrival of the B.C. party at the capital and the preliminary meetings there.

Upon arrival at Ottawa Trutch and his colleagues immediately called upon Lord Lisgar, the governor-general. His Excellency turned them over to Sir George Cartier . . . "after he (the governor-general) had invited us to dine at Government House on Tuesday night."

"Sir George took us at once to the Privy Council, then in session, and introduced us to the different members of the cabinet with

END of the ROAD

THE ROUTE we followed in Belgium took us through Bastogne, famous, of course, for the resistance of the American airborne troops in the Battle of the Bulge, but the only signs of war remaining now are the vacant spaces and open squares, which have made it simpler to improve the width of the main roads in this section.

After spending one very hot and noisy (there was a fair opposite the hotel) night in Namur, we followed the main road as far as Waterloo, in order to see this ancient battleground, and view the famous panoramic battle scene. (The battle of Bergisel is similarly recorded in Innsbruck — and just as well done.) It was not built against a background of the real scenery, as I had been led to understand, but as in Innsbruck, it was a circular canvas screen of spirited action with models and battle impediment lying about in the space before the central view point. The whole thing was done by a French artist, and depicted the French cavalry in full charge everywhere. One had to search carefully to find the British squares which defeated them, and one almost came away with the impression that this had been a victory for Napoleon.

We had to slow up at one point where police were grouped around a spectacular accident, that must have happened only a few minutes before we came along.

Nowhere in Belgium, however, have we seen that once familiar sight of a dog pulling a small cart, but the great Percheron horses still have their tails cropped, I am sorry to see.

From Menin to Ypres there is now a three lane black-top highway, and as you near the Salient the once familiar names begin to appear as signposts pointing the way off it. Passchendaele, Hills 60 and 62, Hell Fire Corner, Sanctuary Wood, Langemarck — all were there.

At Sanctuary Wood there is an enterprising Belgian running a small estaminet, and by it he has preserved a section of the original front line, complete with trenches, tunnels, duckboards, helmets, gas masks, rifles, machine guns, mortars, and even samples of the German chest armor. Back of his estaminet he has a museum in which among other things, are several crafty devices whereby the visitor may view several old photographs arranged in sets of 28 for one franc.

On the main roads we encountered plenty of south-bound traffic, and discovered later that Brussels had just commenced the two-week annual holiday, when all businesses but the hotels close their doors.

We saw more big American cars on the roads of Belgium than elsewhere, but their drivers were nothing to admire. I have never seen so many smaller cars in trouble than here. Every mile or so there would be one of them, stopped at side of the road, with someone peering under the bonnet.

May have wondered how

this part of Belgium, need worry no longer. They are still in perfect condition, and quite unspoilt. In fact, the

them in any way beyond assembling their own dead into one large graveyard the other side of Langemarck. There are 70,000 of their fallen in that one cemetery alone.

Near where my own brother was killed at Kemel there used to be a brown marble stone, and on it was carved, "Here the Hun was stopped in his advance to the Sea, March, 1918." This has been carefully removed by the Germans, but they did not disturb the graveyards or other monuments. In fact, they even used the British memorial

services on occasion.

The town of Ypres (they call it Ieper on the signposts now, since all the names have been changed to Flemish) is much larger than it was 31 years ago, when last we visited it, and in the intervening years all signs of war damage have disappeared. I did see some marks of shell splinters beside the cathedral, and we heard that there was some resistance in the vicinity of the Menin Gate. But scars are not visible.

Skindles Hotel, which used to be near the railway station, is now the taxation office, so we stayed in the Continental, across the corner. Here the assistant manager turned out to be ex-Belgian army and a chief of the Resistance, and he proudly informed us that he was one of the three people in this city who was entitled to wear the War Cross. The Germans, he said, seldom visited here, and certainly not his hotel.

Capt. Harry Kingsley, RCN (Ret.) and Mrs. Kingsley have been touring the Continent and his stories, appearing over the past few weeks, have contained useful advice to travellers as well as colorful descriptions of the picturesque European scene. This is the concluding article of the series.

If you ever plan to visit this city, walk up to the Menin Gate, which is a memorial to the 250,000 unknown British dead of the First World War, and time your visit so as to arrive a few minutes before 9 p.m., for at that hour all traffic is stopped, and Belgian buglers muster to sound the Last Post on silver trumpets.

Under the floodlit arches of this great memorial it is a most moving ceremony, and one that has gone on continuously—with the exception of the period of the German occupation—since its construction over 35 years ago. The British Legion has arranged for this to be done in perpetuity, and it is a most impressive, if sad, reminder of the dreadful slaughter of those almost forgotten battles of the First World War.

whom we had a desultory conversation on general subjects for half an hour or so—and on getting up to withdraw Mr. Howe one of the ministers took us in charge—and drove us over the town until dinner time, when he took us to his club to dinner, to which he had also invited two other members of the cabinet, Sir Francis Hincks and Mr. Tilley CB, to meet us; and a most recherche dinner we had, I assure you, and most agreeable dinner companions. So that we went home to our hotel much gratified with our reception and first day in Ottawa" (Note: This was Friday, June 3, 1870).

"The French Canadian ministers were "on the spot" in discussing the Riel-led rebellion at the Red River, but could express themselves fully in respect of the recent efforts of the Fenians to cause trouble."

"At 2 o'clock p.m. yesterday (Saturday, June 4) I had an interview by special appointment with Sir Geo. Cartier, and went over with him the leading points of the negotiation with which we are entrusted and it is arranged that our delegation is to have a conference tomorrow (Monday) at 2 p.m. with the Privy Council, so you see there is great readiness on the part of the government here to go at once into the business—and, of course, no chance of my being able to return to you for some time to come.

"We have certainly been most kindly received (tomorrow evening we are to dine with Sir Geo. Cartier) and so far as I can judge, this government are prepared to meet our advances in a liberal spirit and to do all in their power. However, as we have not yet really gone into details of our business I cannot safely form any judgment as to the result but will inform you as soon as I can do so with any degree of certainty. The government-general, also some of the ministers, are going on Thursday to Montreal to instal Prince Arthur as a Knight of St. Michael and St. George, and there is some talk of our going in company, which I think would be very gratifying—although impeding the completion of our business."

The balance of the letter is personal. Joseph Trutch when he went to Montreal to witness the installation of Prince Arthur—later to be a governor-general of Canada as the Duke of Connaught—did not dream that his own service to Canada and British Columbia would bring knighthood to himself.

THE STORY of the ANGLICAN CHURCH of CANADA

Primate Elected From Pulpit, Pew

LAST WEEK we saw how four streams of settlement, and with them four streams of Anglican church life, flowed into this country. They came by way of the Atlantic coast, from the U.S.A. after the Revolution of '76, through Hudson's Bay into the whole prairie area, and around Cape Horn, up through the Pacific to British Columbia.

How has it come about that the scattered colonial dioceses of the Church of England, controlled by the British Parliament and the Mother Church, have become one autonomous Anglican Church of Canada, and elect their own Primate?

The authorities in church and state "at home" obviously envisaged the Church of England in Canada as an appendage of the state church. It seems pretty clear that they saw little urgency in the needs of the infant church on this side of the Atlantic.

Thanks be to God, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Church Missionary Society were more alive to the challenge of British North America than were the official leaders. Without the men and money contributed by these and other lesser missionary bodies, only a small fraction of the work done could even have been attempted.

Church and government leaders in England looked askance at the desire of the colonial church to establish self-governing synods, although diocesan church societies were formed in several of the older dioceses. These had little legislative power. Legislation affecting the Church of England in Canada had to be enacted by the Parliament at Westminster.

In 1851, John Strachan, first Bishop of Toronto, summoned his clergy, with lay representatives from every congregation, to meet in the first diocesan synod ever held in the British Empire.

The previous year he had laid before the Archbishop of Canterbury his plans for the division of his diocese, which then embraced the whole of Upper Canada. The tempo of church life quickened.

New dioceses were created: Huron in 1857; Ontario in 1862; Algoma in 1873; Niagara in 1875.

Ottawa was carved out of Ontario in 1886.

Meanwhile, there was a growing recognition of the need for a closed bond among the Canadian dioceses. In 1851 the Bishop of Quebec convened a conference of the bishops in British North America. They recommended the formation of provincial, as well as diocesan, synods, and the appointment of a Metropolitan (the ancient title of the presiding bishop of an ecclesiastical province).

This led in 1857 to the passage of the Canadian Act, providing for these reforms, and three years later Queen Victoria named Bishop Fulford of Montreal as the first Metropolitan of the Province of Canada. The Ecclesiastical Province of Rupert's Land and its provincial synod were formed in 1875.

Another advance, much of the credit for which must go to Bishop Strachan, was the election by clergy and lay representatives of the first Bishop of Huron. Benjamin Cronyn was the first Church of England bishop since the early days of the Church to be chosen by popular vote, and the last from eastern Canada to go to England for consecration.

The Confederation of the Canadian provinces in 1867, followed by the construction of the CPR, made Anglicans aware of the need for one ecclesiastical authority for the whole Dominion. A conference was held in Winnipeg in 1890 attended by representatives from the Provincial Synods of Canada and Rupert's Land and from a number of diocesan synods.

It was decided that a General Synod be formed, but that the two provincial synods should continue to be responsible to those matters which properly belong to the province. The General Synod was to have authority in matters of doctrine, and in the missionary and educational work of the Church.

The first General Synod met in Toronto in 1893, and the diocese in British Columbia became part of the Ecclesiastical Province of Rupert's Land. Robert Bachray, Archbishop of Rupert's Land, who, more than any other one man, was responsible for building up the Church in the west, became the first Primate of all Canada.

Three further events, apart from the history of the Primacy itself, deserve to be mentioned. In 1912, the two ecclesiastical provinces became four, with the creation of those of Ontario and British Columbia. In 1940, the Executive Council of General Synod, meeting in Stratford, decided to relinquish all claim on the missionary societies of the Mother Church, and to stand on its own feet financially.

Finally, at Edmonton, in 1955, the General Synod changed the name of the Church from the Church of England in Canada to the Anglican Church of Canada. From the inauguration of the General Synod the Primate was elected by the House of Bishops from among the metropolitans, and in practice the senior metropolitan was always chosen.

However, in 1931, a new canon on the Primacy was enacted by General Synod, providing for election by an electoral college, consisting of bishops, clergy and laymen, and widening to field of selection to include all diocesan bishops.

Under this new provision Dr. Derwyn T. Owen, Bishop of Toronto, was elected in 1934. When a fixed primatial see is established the field will be further widened to include everyone who is eligible for election to a bishopric.

How is the average church member represented in the choice of a Primate?

How the Church of England came to Canada, became an autonomous body, and set a new pattern of church government for the Anglican provinces scattered throughout the Commonwealth, and how this form gives every member . . . clerical and lay . . . a share in the election of a Primate, is told in two articles. This is the second

If he attends the annual vestry meeting of his parish, he has a voice in the election of lay delegates to his diocesan synod, of which all the licensed clergy in the diocese are also members.

When a bishop is elected by a synod he must receive a clear majority of the clerical votes and of the lay votes, counted separately from each other.

The diocesan synod elects an equal number of clerical and lay delegates to the general and provincial synods . . . the clerical delegates elected by the clergy and the lay delegates by the laymen. The number of delegates of each order is determined by the size of the diocese.

All bishops are members of the general and provincial synods in which they sit as the upper house, while clerical and lay delegates constitute the lower.

The executive council of general synod consists of the whole upper house and a number of clergy and laymen from the lower house. Every diocese is represented, the numbers of clergy and laymen being equal, and the diocesan representation varying from one to three of each order, again according to the size of the diocese.

This executive council is the electoral college.

For a primatial election it meets after the opening communion service, as two houses.

The upper house sends a list of nominations to the lower, which then proceeds to ballot on them.

There are no speeches; the time between ballots is occupied in prayer and meditation.

The lower house may ask the upper for additional names, and the balloting continues until one nominee has received more than 50 per cent of the votes of both orders.

In the event that the lower house reaches an unbreakable deadlock, the power of election reverts to the upper house.

This, then, was the procedure to be followed on Sept. 5, when the general synod at Ste. Anne de Bellevue and the electoral college elected the ninth Primate of Canada, the Rt. Rev. H. H. Clark, Bishop of Edmonton.

GINA LOLLOBRIGIDA

By Lydia Lane

UNSPOILED BY SUCCESS

OME—Gina Lollobrigida invited me to tea on my arrival here, and when she gave me the address, I realized that she was still living in the same beautiful apartment where I first met her five years ago.

I thought of that summer of 1954 when the late Humphrey Bogart, her co-star in "Beat the Devil," exclaimed, "What a doll! They call her Italy's answer to Marilyn Monroe, but she'll be the biggest star in Europe one day." And his remark was prophetic.

As I got out of the car in front of her apartment, I wondered how she was wearing her success, but after a firm handshake and a radiant smile as she introduced me to her young son, Milko, Jr., I had my answer.

Gina was wearing a simple blouse and skirt which revealed her tiny waistline. Motherhood had not ruined her beautiful figure.

"I had to be very careful during those nine months," Gina said in English with an ease that was lacking the last time I talked to her. "And one week after Milko was born I was wearing my own clothes again."

"Tell me what you ate in a typical day?"

"Typical?" Gina repeated. "What's that?"

"Typique," I said, for Miss Lollobrigida speaks fluent French.

"I had coffee and milk, bread and marmalade for breakfast," she replied. "For lunch I had green salad, vegetables, cheese and fruit. I used very little salt and drank no wine. For supper there were eggs or cold chicken, fruit and a salad." The Italians usually eat their most important meal in the middle of the day.

"No pasta?" I asked. Gina shook her pretty head and confessed that starches were no part of her diet even now.

"And did you do gymnastics?" I asked.

"Yes, at home," Gina said. "I did the exercises my body needed."

Gina's maid was taking some beautiful dresses out of the living room.

"There were photographers here for an American magazine," she explained.

"How did you like Hollywood?" I asked, knowing she had recently returned from making "Never So Few" with Frank Sinatra.

Gina was enthusiastic.

"Everyone was so friendly, and everything was so well organized. It is good to work without waste. We started shooting at noon and worked until 8 p.m. I don't like getting up at 5 in the morning," she exclaimed. "It's too early."

"Who dresses you?" I asked, enchanted with the clothes being carried into the next rooms.

"I design them," she answered, reminding me that she had intended to be an artist.

"Do you paint now?"

"No. I can have only one serious interest. But I have a camera and I take pictures. I find this relaxing. The only painting I do is on my face," she added.

I remembered Gina had told me of a clause in every contract permitting her to apply her own make-up. There was clear sunlight in the room and although she was wearing makeup, it was so delicately applied I was not aware of it.

"No matter how much you do to your face, it should never look artificial," Gina explained. "I use my face as I would a canvas."

Suddenly she laughed. "We are wearing the same perfume," she said, correctly naming my scent, and mentioned her second favorite. It is another of my choices, too.

"You are more beautiful now than you've ever been. How do you stay so unsophisticated?" I asked.

"You have to work harder to prove you can act," Gina replied. She feels that beauty has its disadvantages, too.

Her husband, Dr. Milko Skofic, came into the room, and it was apparent that there was great "sympatica" between these two.

"You have done a good job of combining your marriage and career," I remarked in parting.

Gina smiled at her husband. "It is possible because there are no conflicts of interest. You have to be together in marriage to make it last," she said.

Mr. Churchill's doctors had advised him to spend as much time as possible out of doors, and so he would travel almost daily to the Atlas Mountains, driving with his staff in several cars, and there the discussions would continue in the open air.

On one of these occasions, Churchill's party stopped for a meal in a field which a Moroccan farmer was ploughing with oxen.

His dog, rather like an Alsatian, viewed their arrival with much interest, which increased when Mr. Churchill sat down in a large camp chair, and began to eat a piece of cold fried chicken. The dog grovelled towards him on his belly, with pleading eyes, Mr. Churchill, looked down.

reached the Royal Marines Office on Christmas Day.

A junior officer, who had been left in sole charge, communicated the contents of the cable to the Admiralty branch that dealt with the promotion of officers to the Marines equivalent of flag rank. There,

"Your horse d'oeuvre," he said quietly. Hollis lifted the napkin and saw, glittering on the white plate the polished brass insignia of a major-general.

The Prime Minister had gone to enormous trouble to procure these almost unobtainable emblems from Algiers; he had even greater difficulty, however, in getting the approval to Hollis' promotion from London, for his wishes should wait until after the holiday. Such was their youth and inexperience that they sent a signal to this effect to Marrakesh.

This aroused Churchill to retort: "Have you no motorcars, or airplanes, or telephones in the U.K.?"

To this there was no answer, and Hollis was immediately promoted to major-general, a promotion approved in London by two very shaken young men.

NAMING the FERRY TSAWWASSEN RECALLS

By Bruce McElvie

STRANGE LEGEND

WITH THE CONSTRUCTION of provincially owned and operated ferry steamers between Vancouver Island and the mainland, to commence in 1960, residents of British Columbia are hearing of a tiny place near Point Roberts. It bears an Indian name, currently spelled "Tsawwassen," but more familiar to pioneers of the Lower Fraser Valley as "Chewassen."

Before the white men settled upon the banks of the Stahlo Prole, as the natives knew the Fraser, it was a place of some consequence to the traffic that passed between Vancouver Island and the Mainland. The tribesmen that populated the bays and coves where clams could be gathered with ease, and who dwelt by the streams where silver salmon ran annually to crowd the fishermen's weirs, all knew Tsawwassen. They also knew the proud people and mighty warriors who dwelt there.

The Tsawwassens were Halkomayems, that is, they were kin of the tribes that possessed the low lands that fanned from the Cascades where the mighty stream tumbled from the mountain barrier. There were some 16 tribes, or bands, of Halkomayem stock; each independent, but at the same time interdependent, particularly for defence against the fierce Yucultas from the north. Villagers from one band would, on occasion, war with those of another, and local prides and jealousies existed then, as now.

When the Saanich and the other tribes from the lower portion of Vancouver Island crossed to enjoy the silver wealth of the salmon runs that each year choked the muddy waters of Stahlo Prole, they usually landed first at Tsawwassen. From these watchers of the waters they could learn if the hated Yucultas were reported in the vicinity, for these piratical raiders in their long canoes were wont to rush the lower river villages, butchering the unwary warriors and carrying the women and children off into slavery. After such a foray they would linger amid the sheltering growth along the river banks, hoping that they might ambush the fleets of fishing canoes on their way up the river. If at Tsawwassen it was learned that the Yucultas had lately been in the river, or rumor suggested they were expected, the Islanders would round the high bluff of Point Roberts and go up the crooked, narrow little Nicomekl to follow the Tsalkwakan portage to the Salmon, the twisting, sluggish stream that emptied into the Great River near where the white strangers were later to build the fort that they called "Langley," but which every Halkomayem knew was properly "Snugamish."

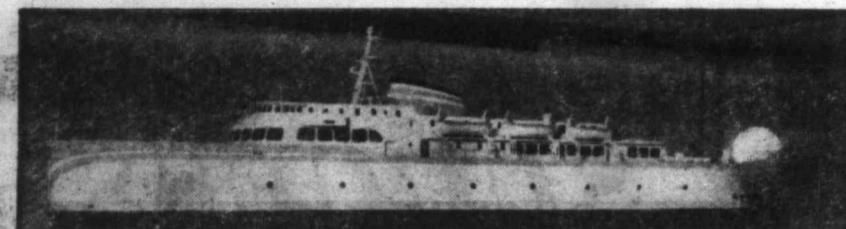

Moreover, it was a chief who had been trained at Tsawwassen, the mighty Whattlekainum, who had befriended the "Whaneetums," or white people. He it was who had saved the life of Simon Fraser, when the young braves planned to kill the explorer near Mt. Lehman, and extended the hand of friendship to the Hudson's Bay men later.

WHATELKAINUM'S father was a native of Skalamet, the big Quonite village where the B.C. Penitentiary is situated at New Westminster. He was a stern, thoughtful man and a great warrior. As befitting son of the mighty Chief Stetzon, he had to wed with a princess of beauty, blood and renown. He found her in the household of the head chief of Tsawwassen. Her proud parent insisted that the young people should make their home with him on the seashore rather than in Stetzon's great village on the big river.

It was there, then, at Tsawwassen, that Whattlekainum was born. He was a bright child and was a favorite with the whole community. His father was proud of him, but of course could not exhibit such a feeling of affection—only squaws did that. But he was determined that Whattlekainum should excel in every endeavor.

One day, when the boy reached his 14th year, his father awakened him before daylight.

"My son," he said, "you will never acquire wealth by sleeping when the sun is awake. Get up and take a swim in the sea; then rub yourself down with cedar bark. You must do this every day as long as you live. Then each day after you have your swim you will run to the point (Roberts) and back. You will also hunt and fish.

Thus was Whattlekainum initiated into a rigorous schedule of training. There were no holidays; no slackening by reason of weather. Through wind, cold and heat, he religiously performed the tasks and exercises that his father prescribed. He grew strong and healthy. He had proved himself a good hunter, particularly in constructing pitfalls for elk and deer, and he had slain a bear with his knife. He had become the champion of village games. No one could overtake him in a long-distance race, nor could any athlete throw him in a wrestling match.

HIS FATHER was proud of these accomplishments, but he was not satisfied.

"There is something greater than being the winner in sports," he said. "You must learn to be a great warrior. I want you to be able to lead the tribe in warfare. I want you to be as brave as was the man whose heart I show you." And the chief took out of a wrapping a human heart.

The young warrior was more than ever meticulous not to disobey a single one of his parent's instructions. He now ran to the point each day for his salt sea ablutions; he practiced for hours with bow and spear.

On one occasion when as he was on his way from Tsawwassen to Point Roberts, he thought he heard some person singing in the forest, but he could not see anyone. The music seemed to keep ahead of him. When he reached the point he looked into the water and saw a round, frothy substance upon the surface. He plunged into the centre of the froth—and remembered no more until he came to himself some time later on shore.

It was night time. He started back to Tsawwassen and on the way he was attacked by two large owls. They pulled his long hair and cut his head with their sharp claws, and covered his face with their wings so that his mouth filled with feathers, and he was made insensible by the offensive odor of the birds. As he lay sleeping the owls revealed to him that he was to become a mighty warrior and hunter.

SOON AFTER THIS the young brave was called to come and dwell at Skalamet and become a war leader. He continued his exercises, and often ran across the country to Tsawwassen.

One day he was returning from there to his new home when a terrific storm developed. The winds tore at the forest; great trees crashed to the ground, and more supple ones bent over like tall grass in a hailstorm. Animals, birds and insects became frightened, and ran wildly through the swaying forest. A great snake slithered up to Whattlekainum as he stood in the protection of a particularly well-rooted tree. The reptile wound itself about him and climbed to his throat, and coiled about his neck. Whattlekainum stood perfectly still, and presently the snake slid down and disappeared.

Then two wolf cubs ran to him and whimpered. They were badly frightened. Whattlekainum stooped and picked the little things up, and held them in his arms. Then there was a snarl, and the she-wolf rushed upon him.

He spoke to her: "Why are you angered?" he asked. "I am caring for your little ones—see, no harm has come to them."

Then the mother whimpered with joy and rubbed her head against his leg. He handed the pups to her, and as he did so he stroked her head.

"Now," he said, "so that I will not do you any harm if we should meet again, I will mark you."

He took out his bag of paint, and he painted a red circle on the fur about her neck. She licked his hand and then disappeared with her little ones.

IT WAS SOME TIME after this great storm that there was a shortage of food at Skalamet.

The hunters had failed to find game, and the fishermen could not catch sufficient to supply the people. Whattlekainum volunteered to go and try to kill a few seals on the lower river. He took a noted hunter with him.

They rowed down the north arm of the river, almost to Musqueam, but never saw sign of a seal.

Then, on the bank there appeared a great she-wolf. Whattlekainum's companion was going to shoot, but the chief stayed him, for he caught a glint of red ringing the animal's neck. Her tail was wagging, and she appeared to be trying to communicate with him. Then she turned and darted back up the river bank, and Whattlekainum, knowing that she was trying to tell him something, turned the canoe and they followed.

It was some little distance ahead that they rounded a little bend and found two seals, freshly killed, on the beach. They took them into the canoe and proceeded. They had not gone far before two more seals were picked up, and later two more. And now the canoe was filled, and as they continued their journey upstream, the she-wolf appeared for a moment on the bank of the river, her tail wagging, and called a note of farewell. The kindness of Whattlekainum had been repaid.

As the years passed Whattlekainum became a real warrior chief of his people, but he used his great influence to preserve peace among them. The fact that he was a chief of both the Quonites and the Tsawwassens gave him a great influence amongst the Halkomayems and their allies. But naturally such a general regard was accompanied by the envy and hatred of some. One of those who wanted to bring disaster and pain to the young chief was a gigantic medicine man from Active Pass.

EACH YEAR when the salmon fishing season ended on the river, the Indians gathered at the Saan-a-sant (Pitt River), for a holiday. At least it would be a time of amusement and entertainment for the men, but the women would wade about in the soft oozy flat lands and with their toes feel for roots for winter food. There would be anywhere from 5,000 to 10,000 natives gathered there each year—and that is why the low lands of the Pitt Valley are so rich in native artifacts representing a wide area. The conjurers would exhibit their tricks; the gambling games would be carried on day and night, and new songs and dances would be introduced. Peoples from Vancouver Island, from Puget Sound, up the river as far as the forks (Lytton), and even from the Okanagan would appear. All was laughter and gaiety, for every canoe was laden with salmon, dried for the winter.

But there was one man who was not happy. It was the ugly giant from across the Gulf. Every time he saw Whattlekainum his heart raced with hatred.

There was a great banquet given, and as is usual on such occasions, the chief called out the name of a guest and a great dish of food was carried to him. When the name of Whattlekainum was announced, he saw the giant make a pass over the food as it was carried by him. Instead of partaking of the boiled seal that was placed in front of him, Whattlekainum called his dog and gave him a portion. In hardly more than a minute the animal fell over dead.

Whattlekainum noticed that the big medicine man hurried away.

RUSHING to his own tent for his best bow and arrows, Whattlekainum went in search of his enemy. He called him out of his quarters and taxed him with the intention of poisoning him. The big fellow did not deny it.

"For this you will die," shouted Whattlekainum and he drove an arrow into the giant's stomach.

Yes, Tsawwassen was an important spot in the centuries that unfolded in the dusk, but now that the government intends that it shall become an important link in the chain of transportation, a new glory will surround the old name.
